Courageous, Sincere—W. J. Bryan That Yellow Peril And China's 600,000,000 Numbers Never Rule

—By Arthur Brisbane—

Copyright, 1925, by the Star Company.

THE SUDDEN death of William Jennings Bryan is a loss to this country.

The millions that disagreed with his political theories respected his integrity and courage and will regret the loss of a brave, sincere man.

William Jennings Bryan held the confidence and affection of an enormous following from the day he entered public life until the day of his death. He never compromised with what he believed to be the truth. He set before the Nation an example of sincerity needed in our public life.

LLOYD GEORGE believes that "the Yellow Peril" is constantly increasing, and warns the White races. Intelligent Russians, the men of keen mind and desperately strong will, that overthrew the Romanoffs, are teaching Chinese rebels under the Christian, General Feng, all that Russia knows.

AND some of the Rockefeller millions, used to fight disease are diminishing the death rate in China.

Also, thousands of Chinese girl babies that used to be drowned are allowed to grow up now—modern industry makes them self-supporting, even profitable. They become the mothers of more Chinese.

TAKING the present population of China, which is near six hundred millions—the Chinese census ignores the very old and very young—you might, with a simple calculation, prove that the Mongolian population of China alone would soon exceed all the rest of the world's population.

BUT, "trees do not grow into the Heavens." And, besides, for your comfort, remember that mere numbers have never ruled the earth.

A few Greeks beat back the power of Persia. Alexander, with his Greek flying wedge, entered Persia and made that country his own.

A few Romans under Caesar conquered Gaul, whose brave people have become the French Nation.

Then a handful of Frenchmen under William of Normandy conquered the British Islands.

And everybody knows what a shipload of Puritans did to the copper-colored owners of this country.

THERE IS COMFORT for the White race, including Lloyd George, in news from North Africa, where France with modern weapons and French energy is fighting the Riffs.

At first, those semi-barbarous descendants of Moors that once ruled in Spain followed with fanatic faith their leader, Abd-El-Krim. He represented Allah and his prophet, Mohammed. And, of course, he would win.

But recently Krim's leaders have lost confidence. The French bombard the Riff's villages from the air, and meet them on the ground with tanks, their machine guns spitting bullets through the Riffs, while Frenchmen inside remain perfectly safe. There are also French armored cars that go sixty miles an hour, killing as they go.

MOHAMMED, through his servant, Abd-El-Krim, seems unable to stop the French.

FRANCE is doing physically to the Riffs what she did years ago, mentally and psychologically, to other North Africans, in Algiers.

When the French first ruled in Algiers, the natives believed in their spiritual leaders, especially in their magicians, performing wonderful feats. And French influence was weak.

The wise Frenchmen took from the boulevards the greatest of modern magicians and sent them to Algiers to show the natives some REAL magic.

The French magician had a

CLOUDBURST DAMAGE THOUSANDS, ONE HURT; BOLT HITS 2 CHURCHES

The most destructive storm of the season swept Boston and New England today, washing out railroad tracks and highways, flooding streets and industrial plants, drenching thousands bound for work and rolling up thousands of dollars in damage.

Great forks of lightning stabbed out of the dripping skies to strike dwelling houses and other buildings, and trees and poles were felled, putting hundreds of telephones and telegraph circuits out of commission.

Automobiles, trapped in sweeping floods, when the deluge proved too great for sewers and catch-basins, suffered washed-out bearings, flooded carburetors and interiors and, in many cases, were abandoned because of the disablements.

In Boston the Weather Bureau reported a record precipitation of an inch of rain in one hour and forty minutes, setting a new record for the year.

Every taxi was in use, street cars, buses and the tunnels were jammed with those seeking dry transportation, and the North and South Stations and other terminals were virtually blockaded by drenched commuters, already wet, but seeking to escape a further soaking, even while late for work.

Lightning struck the home of Captain James Laffe of the Back Bay traffic squad, No. 191 Washington street, Brighton. The chimney of the two and one-half story frame

ROBS STORE MANAGER OF $24 AT GUN POINT

An armed thug held up and robbed Patrick Menahan, manager of M. O'Keefe's store at No. 57 Berkeley street today, taking the contents of the cash register and Monahan's pocket money.

The thug got $24.50. Poking a revolver in Monahan's stomach, he forced him to hand over the till money. When he found there was but $14, he grunted in disgust, according to the manager, and went through Monahan's pockets for more, finding a $10 bill.

Monahan had just opened the store for business when the robber walked in. He "pulled the job," Monahan said, like an experienced artist, and was through and gone in a few minutes.

There was no one in the locality at the time. As the holdup man left, he waved Monahan back of the counter with his gun and warned him not to follow. When the manager got to the door, the street was deserted.

Monahan gave a good description of the man to the police. He said the robber was twenty-eight to thirty years old, five feet, nine inches tall, and weighed about 170 pounds. He was of light complexion and wore a light brown raincoat and gray cap.

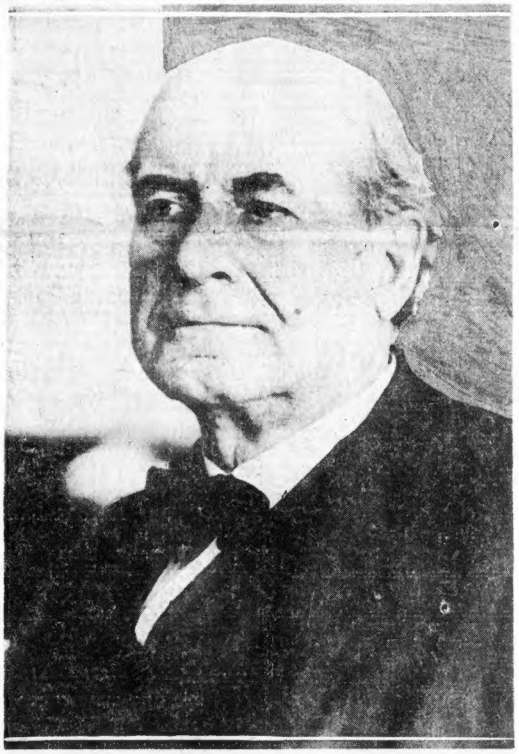
GROOMED FOR HIS LAST FIGHT



This striking photograph of William Jennings Bryan shows him posed for an International Newsreel photographer as he reached Dayton, Tenn., prepared for his battle as a Fundamentalist opposing what he termed the fight of his life against the forces of Infidelism." In winning the fight that led to the conviction of Evolution Teacher Scopes he so weakened his constitution that he lost his life, his friends declare. He had lived to see, however, the triumph of four great reforms that he had advocated: Election of senators by the people; prohibition; income tax and woman suffrage.

BIBLE'S CHAMPION TO BE BURIED AS SOLDIER OF NATION

Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—William Jennings Bryan, in his "fight for the faith," defied his physician's warning to "take it easy." He died as the result of acute dilation of the heart, in the opinion of Dr. Raymond Wallace, Chattanooga physician and surgeon, who was consulted by Mr. Bryan during the Scopes' trial, and who made an examination of the commoner Friday.

Dr. Wallace was first consulted by Mr. Bryan on Friday, July 17, and at that time was warned to "go slow." After court had adjourned for the week-end, Mr. Bryan sought the advice of the Chattanooga physician, telling him of the diabetic condition from which he had been suffering for several years.

Mr. Bryan at that time complained of having slept poorly while in Dayton. He said that two years or more ago his condition had been serious, but later had improved. On July 17 Dr. Wallace, after analysis, found no diecatic acid nor acetone, such as is always present in extreme diabetes cases. Mr. Bryan seemed relieved by the physician's report.

ARMED BANDS SEARCH WOODS FOR SUSPECT

Hudson, N. H., July 27.—Two posses, working toward each other, today are trying to drive a madman out of the brush and into captivity in the belief that he is the slayer of the aged Gillis sisters.

Following the report of Robert Beard that a maniac leaped from the underbrush and attacked him and then fled into the woods, women and children of families living near the wooded section were in fear of a repetition of the slaying of Helen and Georgiana Gillis last Wednesday.

In many cases, husbands and fathers gave up work for the day to stay at home with their families.

As an aid to the New Hampshire trailers of the slayer, Chief of Police Joseph Pelletier of Tyngsboro, Mass., started from Tyngsboro today, working through the woods in the direction of Hudson, with a posse of several men, to beat through the brush in pursuit of the hunted madman.

In spite of a driving rain, following a severe electrical storm, the posse of Sheriff John T. O'Dowd,

COOLIDGE CONFERS ON FARM PROBLEMS

Swampscott, July 27 (A.P.).—Continuing his practice of conferences here from time to time with Congressional leaders, President Coolidge set aside time today to discuss the farm problem and the legislative situation generally with Representative Purnell of Indiana, ranking Republican of the House Agriculture Committee.

The visit to White Court of Mr. Purnell, week-end guest of Secretary Sanders, was arranged to enable him to pay his respects to the President and talk over the problems with which the Congressman is familiar.

In the last Congress Mr. Purnell was one of the leaders in the unsuccessful fight to enact the McMary-Haugen farm relief bill.

MAHONY TELLS OF PICKWICK REPAIRS

Fortified with official records from the archives of his department, Building Commissioner John H. Mahony went back on the stand today at the resumption of the trial of the twelve men indicted for the Pickwick Club disaster.

Mr. Mahony was on nearly all day Friday, and was being questioned concerning two applications for permits when the week-end recess was taken.

One was an application for a permit to make certain repairs to the Pickwick Club building, damaged by fire on April 13, nearly three months before the collapse, on July 4, and the consequent loss of forty-four lives.

The other was an application for a permit to shore up and underpin the east wall.

While Commissioner Mahoney's testimony is technical it is far from dry. It is followed with the closest interest by the twenty or more lawyers engaged in the trial.

Assistant District Attorney Alpert announced this morning that he hoped to conclude presentation of the State's case by the end of this week.

POSSE HUNTS MANIAC AS SLAYER OF TWO HUDSON SISTERS

HUDSON MAN CLUBBED ON HEAD BY SUSPECT

working out of Hudson, was increased to nearly forty.

The two forces are expected to meet at a point in the vicinity of Sagamore, N. H. The wooded section is not large, and it was believed impossible that the suspected man could escape the clutches of his pursuers.

The maniac who attacked Beard was armed with a heavy club and struck without warning. Beard had noticed a dog tied to a tree and had gone to investigate with three companions.

Just as one of the number struck a match to examine the dog, which was whining as if in hunger, the man suddenly appeared from the bushes, smashed Beard with his club and fled. Beard was knocked down.

The dog has disappeared since the man released it and it is hoped that he may reappear to give the posses a clue to the stranger's whereabouts. The dog was emaciated, as if having been starved for at least three days.

TRIED TO STARVE DOG.

The authorities believe the man sought is the owner of the dog and tried to starve him in another expression of maniacal tendencies.

The posse set to work at daylight with the idea of first searching every square foot of ground between Stewart's Corner and Ayer's Pond.

While a dozen clues are being run down by various officials of the county and State, Sheriff O'Dowd believes that the maniac hiding in the woods is the man who attacked Helen Gillis, aged eighty, and her seventy-six-year-old sister, Georgiana, crushing the skulls of both women with a heavy stone. The entire countryside is on the alert and every farmhouse and settlement within a radius of a score of miles is keeping a sharp lookout for the madman.

WOMAN IS SOUGHT.

So sudden was the attack that the Hudson man could give little description of his assailant. He managed to make his way to Hudson where he gave the alarm. It is feared his skull has been fractured and he is being examined by specialists today.

A woman who called at the home of Helen and Georgiana Gillis on the day they were brutally beaten to death is sought by the police of this town as a possible participant in the most mysterious murder in the annals of the local authorities. Her identification went unnoticed by the neighbors of the Gillis sisters on the afternoon of their death and a score of near-by residents were grilled tonight in an effort to secure her description and discover the reason of her visit to the scene of the murder on Central street.

The caskets in which the Gillis sisters reposed were opened to allow friends and relatives to see their faces. The wounds on the heads of the sisters were concealed. The caskets were placed lengthwise with the rostrum and were banked with flowers from confraternities connected with the church. The pews in the center of the church which the sisters occupied when attending services were draped in white and a bouquet of flowers was placed at each end.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.

Relatives of the sisters sat in front pews. Sprinkled among the mourners were detectives from Nashua and other cities. Sharp watch was kept on suspicious looking persons. It was necessary to close the doors of the church to keep out the overflow. Most of the attendants were women well along in years, here and there among them were children. The gallery was crowded.

Rev. Frederick C. Rolfs, pastor, stepped to the front of the dais, drew a breath, surveyed the mourners, raised his eyes aloft and opened the services with a prayer. The hymn, "Lead Kindly Light," was sung by a man and a woman seated on a stage, followed by Scripture reading and another hymn, "Abide With Me." There was no musical accompaniment.

Next came an announcement by Pastor Rolfs that Sunday next memorial services for the Gillis sisters will be held in the church to which all were invited. He preached a eulogy on the life of the Gillis sisters.

GOOD CHURCH MEMBERSS.

"This little church is a heavenly building," said Pastor Rolfs. "We have suffered a serious loss and one it will take a long time from which to recover. We have lost two of our oldest members.

"They were just ordinary members of the church, these dear souls, who plodded their way from their home to services here in fair and foul weather, unmindful of the elements in order that they might serve their God and Master.

"Yes, I have seen them coming here in inclement weather, while stronger and healthier members of the congregation remained away. I regarded these dear old ladies as my most loyal friends, a father of this church, I'll miss them.

"I was asked by acquaintances after the news of the cruel killing of these women, why it was, with their religious belief and faith in this church, that God didn't protect them.

VERY HUMAN.

"I never waste time over the scoffer. It was not the will of God these souls were taken away. It was the will of man; God did not enter it.

"We believe that out of this untoward circumstance God will glorify His name.

"Those dear souls were very human. I met them daily. We chatted on topics of the day. I recall delivering a sermon recently and Helen came to me and said she liked it. She said I made her realize her sins. I recall saying to her why, you have no sins, you have led a good life. It showed the trend of thought of the dear old lady, her faith in the forgiveness of God and belief in the hereafter.

"I defy anyone to tell me a scandal ever came from the home of the Gillis sisters. They used to call them the Gillis girls jokingly. They were referred to as the 'Giddy girls,' they were so bright and witty. They lived for the church and had a circle of friends. Frequently they visited relatives in Goffstown or Manchester.

HEALTH FAILING.

"Oftentimes when they made fresh biscuits it was not unusual for one or the other to fetch some to my home, and when Mrs. Rolfs was ill flowers were sent to her by them.

"Those dear old ladies believed in God. Yes, they walked with God, their faith in God was firm and steady; they were the embodiment of goodness. The influence they exerted will abide.

"I noticed Helen appeared to be failing in health and felt she would not survive the coming Winter.

"They were two old members of the church pondering on their 80th year of life. They were two dear old ladies. We'll miss them."

BURIAL AT HILLS FARMS.

Rev. Warren L. Noyes, retired, of Nashua, offered the closing prayer, in which he invoked Divine assistance in apprehending the murderer to the end that the latter may repent his cruel act and die with the forgiveness of the Maker. He declared it was a question in some cases whether the courts were working properly in punishing criminals. At the conclusion of the services the bodies were borne from the church to the hearse awaiting in the presence of a concourse of people, many still weeping from the effects of the sermon of Parson Rolfs.

Burial was in Hills Farms, in the northern part of the town.

Commitment services were held at the cemetery.

An unusual incident happened when the crowd assembled outside the church. During the services an unidentified man acted strangely by running toward the closed doors, peering through the crack and then darting off toward the wooded section.

His behavior was so sudden that it caught the police off their guard. Inspector Edward C. McCarthy of the Nashua police made his way through the crowd and trailed the man as far as he could. McCarthy lost track of him on a road leading to a place called Squatter's Row along the banks of the Merrimack River.

From the action of the man and the haste in which he got away he has been booked as a suspect. Efforts will be made today to locate him.

Attorney-General Jeremy Wal dron made a study of the Gillis homestead. He secured the services of a criminologist. Together they re-enacted the manner in which the Gillis girls were supposed to have met their death. An imaginary course taken by the slayer in making a get-away was re-enacted. The trail led to the side door on the Pleasant street side to an underbrush where it is believed the slayer hid the weapon with which the deed was committed. The slayer is believed to be a person familiar with the town.

POSTAL THEFT IS FOILED IN SOUTH END

An attempt to burglarize the post office substation in the McDonald cigar store at No. 1051 Washington street, South End, was frustrated by the alertness of the night watchman, Peter Dooley, it is charged.

The thug through a blind alley, losing the man in a chase over the roofs of tenement buildings in the neighborhood.

In the postal sub-station was several thousand dollars in cash, together with money-order blanks and several thousand dollars' worth of stamps.

Dooley was making his rounds of the building, the upper floors of which are occupied as a lodging house, when he heard a noise in the alley below.

Slipping down the fire escape the watchman reached the first floor in time to see a man working at the door at the rear of the postal substation. Making his way to the street, the watchman ran into Cherry street and thence into the alleyway.

The burglar, hearing the approach of the watchman, fled up the alley, which ends in a blank pocket. The watchman, who left his revolver in his room, drew his night stick and gave pursuit. He chased the man through the alley into a tenement building and up four flights of steps to the roof. The fugitive leaned over an areaway to the roof of another building and made good his escape.

A woman living at No. 11 Compton street, who was unable to sleep, was sitting at her window when the burglar first endeavored to force the door of the postal substation.

She watched the man until convinced that he was a burglar and then called the police of Station 5. When the patrolmen arrived a cordon of police was thrown about the district, but the intruder escaped.

light trunk of iron, connected with an electric current, that held it to the floor when the current was turned on, the trunk becoming very light when it was turned off.

All the magicians together tugged at the trunk, but couldn't lift it as long as the Frenchman of magic hand held up his finger. The magicians retired, the Frenchman turned off the current, lowered his finger, and a little boy lifted up the trunk easily.

WHEN the African magicians wanted to try it again the Frenchman turned a strong electric current into the metal handles of the trunk, and the magicians, squirming and bellowing, found that they were unable to let go.

THAT settled it. The people of Algiers decided that French magicians were better than their own, and that reconciled them to French rule.

French fliers, tanks and armored cars, plus French efficiency, will probably persuade the followers of Abd-El-Krim that their leader is not up to date.

WHITE Nations need not worry about the Yellow Peril or any Mongolian invasion, if they will keep themselves [illegible] prepared. TEN [illegible] in the air are worth TEN THOUSAND on the ground.

THE French worry about the increasing population of Germany and fear another day of revenge. But, if Germany had a population of three hundred millions instead of sixty millions, she could do nothing against France, provided France had the greater air power.

With France ruling the air, a declaration of war or any warlike act by Germany would mean within twenty-four hours destruction of every important city and all industrial centers in Germany.

A RACE as wise as the Germans would start war cautiously under such conditions. They hope that war will be killed off by science. When knights in armor met on the highway they would challenge each other and fight, "laying on" lustily with their swords. But, when the musket ball came in, the armor came off, and the knights stayed home.

FLYING machines, high explosives, poison gas, will make a country as small as Switzerland powerful enough to inflict mortal injury on the greatest Nation in the World, just as a dwarf automatic pistol could now end the life of the most powerful prizefighter. Dugueclin today, in all his armor, would be vanished by a quasimodo.

When the nations, White, Brown and Yellow, realize that war means death for both sides, war will die out.

MEANWHILE, the United States should become as quick as possible the most powerful Nation in the air, able forever to keep control of its own part of the Earth's atmosphere.

A great air fleet, trained fliers and an adequate fleet of submarines are all that this Country needs to take care of the Yellow Peril and any other perils.

Intelligence rules and survives. Where are the rack, the thumb-screw, and the auto-da-fe? If this nation will use its intelligence, it need not worry.

INK IS CHANGED IN CRABTREE BIBLE ENTRY

Tech Expert Says the Writing Was Recent, Rather Than Many Years Old

That old ink in the supposed old birth record of Lotta Crabtree's daughter in the "Crabtree Bible" changed from blue to black during his observation of it thismonth, was the statement today of Professor Augustus H. Gillot Technology, testifying in Suffolk Probate Court in behalf of the Crabtree estate.

Professor Gill was put on by counsel for the estate to dispute the story of Mrs. Ida Manning Blankenburg of Tulsa, Okla., who seeks to share in Lotta Crabtree's $3,000,000 fortune as a daughter of the famous actress.

He said the fact that the ink lost its bluish tinge and became a rusty black indicated to him there was iron in the ink, and with the results of his tests, led him to the conclusion that the entry was made recently.

He refused to attempt to state the exact or approximate time when he believed an ageing process of both writing and Bible pibis page took place.

He had the Bible under observation, he said, from July 6 to July 23.

He said he thought caustic soda might have been used to age the flyleaf on which the supposed birth entry was made, and he was asked how he accounted for the fact that he found no alkali on the flyleaf. He explained this by stating that the add in the ink neutralized the alkali that the caustic might have left there.

BAN ON WHISTLE HITS 40,000 TRUCKS

Protest probably will be made by several motor vehicle associations to the order of Registrar of Motor Vehicles Frank A. Goodwin that compression whistles on machines must be done away with by August 1. Day Baker, chairman of the legislative committees of these bodies, said today.

"There are 40,000 trucks in the State using these whistles," said Mr. Day, "and we find that they are most offensive to the driving people from in front of trucks."

According to Day hearings have been called by the Massachusetts Auto Dealers and Garage Association, the Motor Truck Club of Massachusetts and the Metropolitan Garage Association.

CHELSEA BRIDE OF HOUR, ASKS ANNULMENT

Mrs. Alice Manka, Chelsea Polish beauty and bride of an hour, has broken the strange spell which her husband, Frank Manka, Lynn shoemaker, has held over her for the past three years.

The Chelsea girl, who refused to live with her husband and announced her defiance of him even while she wore her bridal robes, has filed a petition in the Essex County Court at Salem asking that the marriage be annuelled.

The petition reveals one of the most unusual nuptial celebrations ever observed in the Bay State.

Three years ago Alice Obrish, seventeen-year-old beauty of No. 75 Division street, attended a party at the home of a friend. There she met Frank Manka, young shoe worker, who fell desperately in love with her on sight.

The girl spurned the shoe worker's attentions, but he persisted and finally won the girl's parents around to the point where they consented to the marriage of their daughter.

While the wedding party was enjoying a feast in a Chelsea hall, an hour after the wedding ceremony was performed, the bride tore the wedding ring from her finger, trampled it beneath her feet and left the hall screaming: "I would rather die than live with him."

The filing of the petition for annulment is the sequel to the unusual marriage.

HUNTING U. S. CITIZEN STOLEN BY CHINESE

Peking, July 27 (I.N.S.).—American Consul Sokobin from Harbin, Manchuria, with General Chang Kwong-Shiang, highest military authority of the three eastern Chinese provinces, today was attempting to secure the release of Dr. Harvey Howard of the Rockefeller Institute, kidnaped by Chinese bandits last week. Howard's place of imprisonment was not known.

A representative of the Foreign Affairs Commission at Harbin is assisting the consul and General Chang.

Consul Sokobin reported that Murray Palmer, who was killed at the same time that Dr. Howard was taken prisoner, died in defense of a little village at one end of his Manchurian farm. His Chinese assistant was killed and a Russian was wounded by the Chinese bandits.

SAY HELP REFUSED SICK MAN

Gloucester Fishermen Wax Indignant Over Incident Off No Man's Land

The refusal of a government rum chasing boat, Cutter No. 8, to take a stricken seaman from a fishing boat off No Man's Land, is expected to lead to a government investigation as a result of a complaint filed here by Captain Manuel Sylvia of the fishing craft.

According to Captain Sylvia, a member of his crew, Ross Williams, of No. 80 Walnut avenue, Roxbury, was stricken with a serious illness while the boat was on the fishing grounds, last Friday.

The Alice May, Captain Sylvia's craft, carried no one experienced in medicine and the crew immediately signalled the rum chaser, a cutter marked No. 8, asking for assistance.

SAYS REQUEST REFUSED.

Captain Sylvia asked that the stricken seaman be taken ashore by the speedy coast guard boat that the sufferer might secure medical attention as soon as possible.

According to Frank Murray of Nantucket, a member of the crew of the Alice May, the skipper of the coast guard vessel refused to pay any attention to the appeal for assistance and the fishing schooner was forced to make a thirteen hour run to deliver Williams to a hospital on the coast.

FORMAL PROTEST.

The run was made into New Bedford and after receiving attention there the stricken man was removed to his home in Roxbury where his condition today was regarded as serious.

The story of the refusal of the coast guard cutter to render assistance has stirred considerable feeling among the sailors of the Gloucester fishing fleet and formal protest will be made to the Federal authorities at Washington.

FRANCE CAN PAY; WANTS MORE

Offers U. S. Only "Promises" on Present 4 Billion Debt, Says G. W. Hinman

By GEORGE WHEELER HINMAN

Chicago, July 27 (I.N.S.).—The adjustment of the French debt to the United States government, wrote the Paris correspondent of a Chicago newspaper on Friday, will be followed by the floating of a huge French loan in the United States.

In return for France's promise to pay, within fifty or sixty years, the four billions that she owes to the United States Treasury, she will expect the American people to give her $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 more of their cash savings and to accept still other promises to pay. That is the idea. Those roughly are the figures behind it.

FRANCE COULD PAY BACK.

In the last few years credits and loans to the French have averaged over $100,000,000 a year. The French are indebted to the United States for not less than $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 today.

In loans and investments, the export of American capital to France has been not less than $100,000,000 a year for most years since the war. In addition American tourists have carried American money overseas and left it, by the tens of millions, in the hands of the French people.

It is estimated that the French could pay back the United States all they owe if they made their payments under the British debt plan and still have $50,000,000 a year left.

Have the French done so? They have not. Have they paid back the American dollars or any noteworthy part of them? They have not.

A "QUEER" PROPOSITION.

Instead they want $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 more of American savings. If there is a fair chance of getting this they are willing to talk about an "adjustment" of the four billions of government debt, with a "moratorium" or delay of two or three years for the first payment on account.

The whole proposal may be called queer. In private business it would be called worse than queer.

If the United States Government were to accept again France's mere promise to begin paying at some distant date, and then, as a consideration, move to countenance another French loan from private American investors, the United States Government surely would be in the position of encouraging its own citizens to risk their money with a debtor who already had refused to pay an American debt, even though Americans had provided the money with which to make the payment.

CITY OF 800 PULLMANS FOR LEGION AT OMAHA

Omaha, July 27.—The greatest number of Pullman sleeping cars ever gathered in any one place at one time has been promised the American Legion for the Legion national convention this Fall. The sleepers will be assembled close in to the business district and in themselves will house as many people as will the hotels of an ordinary city of 200,000 people.

The Pullman Company has promised that 800 cars will be shunted out at Omaha and turned over to the Legionnaires. "Pullman City," which will spring up in a night, will have a population of 25,000 in less than a day.

MALDEN POLICE TAKE 4 FOR THEFT OF TIRES

Malden police arrested four young men on a charge of larceny of automobile tires. Stanley A. Peltchman of Mt. Pleasant, Mich., had had some trouble with his automobile and left it standing on Eastern avenue, near Maplewood street, Malden, while he went to secure help.

The police say they saw Lawrence Rice, Harold Holland, No. 17 Ashton street, Everett; Clarence McNeil and Frank Smith, both of No. 558 Ferry street, Everett, take two of the tires from the disabled car and throw them in a small motor truck. They pursued the truck and arrested the four men.

READ HER NEW NOVEL IN THIS PAPER

Posed for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Production.

Elinor Glyn, author of "Three Weeks" and other novels, whose latest work, "Love's Blindness," will be published in the Boston Evening American in serial form, far in advance of the issue in book form. The first installment will appear in the Boston Evening American next Monday.

ELINOR GLYN'S NEW BOOK IN AMERICAN

Once more has Elinor Glyn scored—and the Boston Evening American and its readers will score with her.

Miss Glyn, vivid portrayer of life and love, author of "Three Weeks," "His Hour," "The Reason Why" and "The Great Moment," has written a new novel, and this newspaper will publish it shortly in serial form.

It was a fortunate circumstance and a coup that enabled the Boston Evening American to secure serial rights for Miss Glyn's latest novel, which starts Monday, a work which critics, and she herself, assert is the best she has ever done.

"LOVE'S BLINDNESS."

For months, despite other arduous duties, the author has been gathering material and data for "Love's Blindness," the new story, and while the book will not be on sale for some time, Boston Evening American readers will be given opportunity to read the gripping tale far before that date.

From the opening sentence of the new novel the interest begins and is sustained through to the last period that ends the exciting adventure.

Not a dull moment is there from start to finish and no gaps appear in the thrilling narrative. "Love's Blindness" is certain to be one of the outstanding literary triumphs of the season.

CRITICS THRILLED.

Advanced proofs of the book have been read by a number of the leading critics of the nation and all are agreed that the novel is even more thrilling and entrancing than the world-famous "Three Weeks."

Miss Glyn, with her broad knowledge of life, treats her subjects with decided frankness, a practice which in the past has brought her criticism from those persons not willing to call a spade a spade.

REFUSED LOAN OF $1; STABS FRIEND 4 TIMES

Because Charles E. Ferris, twenty-five years old, of No. 9 Milton avenue, Dorchester, early yesterday morning refused to loan George E. Forest, twenty-three, of No. 15 Buckminster road, Brighton, a dollar, the latter is alleged by the police to have pulled out a pocket knife and stabbed Ferris, his friend, four times in the chest. Patrolman Cyman Veno who happened to be coming along at the time, had a hard time to get the knife away from Barnett. Both men were sent to the City Hospital.

FAMILY SILENT IN VANDERBILT WEDDING 'ROW'

Newport, R. I., July 27 (A.P.)—Although the Vanderbilt family refused to discuss the details of the marriage of their daughter Muriel to Frederic Cameron Church, it was learned from departing guests that her sister, Miss Consuelo, who was reported ill at the time of the ceremony, was able to act as her sister's attendant, as had been planned.

Miss Consuelo, it was said had been visited by physicians both Friday night and again Saturday, and it was regarded as probable that these facts led to the story of her inability to attend the wedding.

Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, 2nd, mother of the bride, had the myriads of flowers which formed the decorations for the wedding at Beachmound, distributed among the hospitals and children's institutions of Newport.

Newport has largely lost the hundreds of socially prominent persons who had come from all parts of the country to attend the ceremony.

Newport, R. I., July 27 (Universal)—Society here today discussed another angle of the unusual features of the Vanderbilt-Church wedding. It was to the effect that Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, 2nd, was not in the room while her daughter Muriel, was being married to Frederick Cameron Church, former Harvard athlete.

It was declared that Mrs. Vanderbilt was standing in the music room, but within hearing distance, while the ceremony was being performed.

Just after the wedding service was completed, Mrs. Vanderbilt is said to have stepped from the music room and was the first to kiss the bride.

FISHERMAN FALLS INTO STREAM AND IS DROWNED

Adams, July 27. (A. P.)—Losing his balance while casting into the Deerfield River, near Zoar Station, Harold B. Ryan, a street car conductor, fell into the stream and was drowned, while his wife and brother-in-law looked on.

ENGINE TROUBLE HOLDS UP ITALIAN AVIATOR

Sydney, New South Wales, July 27 (A.P.)—Owing to engine trouble, Commander de Pinedo, the Italian aviator, who is flying from Italy to Japan and who left here for Brisbane, was compelled to return to Sydney. He will be unable to start again for several days.

BIG GAME HUNTER HELD IN BAD CHECK CASE

Tampa, Fla., July 27 (A.P.).—Lady Grace Esiner Mackenzie, international big game hunter and photographer, was in jail here on a charge of issuing a worthless check for $200. She was arrested on a warrant sworn out by G. E. Bray, Tampa realtor, who said he endorsed the draft and later had to make it good.

New York, July 27 (A.P.)—The arrest of Lady MacKenzie marks the conclusion of a ten-day search for her in a half dozen American cities. Persons who had business dealings with her recently said that her checks were not honored at banks and they asked police to locate her.

Lady MacKenzie dropped from sight in New York June 16. Publishers of a book she had written had started contempt of court proceedings for her alleged failure to pay $5,000 and it was reported detectives sought her for issuing a check for $180 to the Hotel Marquette in St. Louis that had been returned unpaid.

Lady MacKenzie's departure from the city was dramatic. Just as the boat was sailing she dashed to the pier in a taxi. The gangplank was lowered to permit her to come aboard and the ship sailed.

Officials of the ship company said that a few hours out Lady MacKenzie demanded of the ship's purser if he had seen her secretary. He had her tickets she explained. When the purser said dihat he had not seen her secretary and Lady Grace said that she had no money with her, the purser offered to take her check. Ship's officials said the Miami bank on which the check was drawn refused payment, on the ground that Lady MacKenzie had insufficient founds on deposit.

Investigators seeking the woman reported to her creditors that she was not rightfully entitled to the title Lady. They reported that she was born in Wisconsin and that she took the name Lady after her first husband, Conrad MacKenzie, died. A second husband obtained annulment of their marriage several years ago on grounds of deceit. She married Frank Teague Jennings of Columbia, S. C., in February of this year and together they promoted a plan to reclaim and colonize 300,000 acres of Florida land. Their venture, however, did not turn out well, it is reported, and they separated a few weeks ago.

WANTED TO FIGHT AND SLEEP, TOO

The physician, however, advised him to refrain from further strenuous activity, but Bryan insisted he was able.

Last Friday the Commoner visited Dr. Wallace, and again complained of sleepless nights. The physician found a slight dilation of the heart, with arrythmia (missed beats). Mr. Bryan's blood pressure was about normal (132-90). The physician also noted odemya, or swelling of the ankles, which he attributed to the faulty heart action.

TOLD OF WEAK HEART.

Dr. Wallace said that the Commoner seemed to be surprised but not unduly alarmed when told of his heart trouble. Mr. Bryan was again advised to seek complete rest and to be careful of his diet.

Dr. Wallace's opinion was that Bryan's condition was such that unless the greatest precautions to guard his health were taken, a fatal attack would not be surprising. Dr. Wallace repeatedly urged Mr. Bryan to conserve his strength.

BURIAL AT ARLINGTON.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed early today, but Mrs. Bryan indicated burial would be in Arlington National Cemetery, as Mr. Bryan, who was a colonel in the Spanish-American War, several times had expressed a desire to be buried there.

Mrs. Bryan, who has been an invalid a number of years, bravely stood the shock of her husband's unexpected death. She immediately took charge of funeral arrangements and received a few of the hundreds of persons who called at the residence to express sympathy.

"I am happy that my husband died without suffering and in peace," she said.

His last words to her, as he entered the room for his nap, were: "I am so sleepy."

GIFT TO JUDGE RAULSTON.

Before he went to sleep Mr. Bryan autographed two books for Judge John T. Raulston, who presided at the Scopes trial. The books were "The Seven Questions in Dispute," and "In His Image."

He wrote: "To Judge and Mrs. John T. Raulston, Winchester, Tenn., with the good wishes of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bryan, July 26, 1925."

Ir. Wallace said Mr. Bryan appeared surprised to learn he had heart trouble, but was not worried. Yesterday he decline an automobile from the Chattanooga Hotel to the railroad station, saying he preferred to walk.

When he arrived here he went immediately to his home and from there to the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church. He sat on the front seat and before the sermon by the Rev. E. A. Peterson of Runa, Tex., he was called upon for a prayer.

The townspeople were inclined to blame the rigors of the trial for the sudden death of their idol. Many of them had been surprised to find Bryan so white and thin when he first arrived. From the plumpness and color of a few years ago he had dwindled and faded. His face was deeply lined and the loose skin indicated recent loss of weight.

Throughout the trial he suffered intensely from the heat. Still, when he burst into action in the last few days, his eyes snapped, his cheeks glowed and he appeared full of life and fire.

The joy of battle carried him easily through the trial and the excitement and enthusiasm of success inspired the great outburst of energy on his part which followed the trial and which in all probability cut short his life.

The fact that he had spent his strength and shortened his life in defense of the Sacred Book raised him to martyrdom in the eyes of Dayton.

Some of his impressive sentences, his declarations of faith on the witness stand, his bitter characterizations of the "infidels," were recalled and given the weight of direct inspiration and divine sanction.

DAYTON HONORS HIM.

All places of business in the town of Dayton are closed today. A. P. Haggard, the Mayor, issued the following statement:

"William Jennings Bryan, the foremost citizen of the world, has fallen while the honored guest of our city. Dayton has never before been so honored as by his twenty days sojourn in our midst.

"All Dayton mourns his untimely death and as an expression of supreme respect to and honor for him, A. P. Haggard, chairman of the board of commissioners for the City of Dayton, do hereby declare a holiday and do hereby call on all places of business to display their flags at half mast and refrain from all avocations as a token of our sorrow for his untimely death."

His death came as the greatest possible shock because Mr. Bryan, himself and every one else believed that he had passed through the Dayton ordeal without suffering the least detriment to his health through the heat, fatigue and excitement.

He told his friends during and after the Scopes trial that no cause has ever stirred him to the bottom of the heart like this one, not even the cause of peace before 1917 or the cause of free silver twenty-nine years ago.

Storms and Beauty Marked Commoner's Life

Mr. Bryan, stormy petrel of national politics for a generation, achieved his highest public representative rank when Woodrow Wilson appointed him to his cabinet as Secretary of State. From that office "the commoner" resigned when his policies of peace did not appear to coincide with those of President Wilson in the latter's attitude toward the entry of the United States into the World War.

Mr. Bryan was born in Salem, Ill., March 19, 1860, the son of Silas Lilliard and Mariah Elizabeth (Jennings) Bryan. He was an "orator" from the time he was able to "recite a piece" up to his speeches in and outside the evolution trial in Tennessee last week.

STUDIED LAW.

In Illinois College in 1881 he received his A. B. with highest honors and was valedictorian of his class. Two years later he took his master's degree after taking his law degree in Chicago in 1883. He received doctor of laws degrees from the University of Nebraska, Maryland and Arizona.

On Oct. 1, 1884 he married Elisabeth Baird of Perry, Ill., now an invalid and who accompanied him to the "Ape" trial in Dayton, Tennessee in a wheel chair, was with him up to the time of his death.

After practising law in Jacksonville, Ill five years, until 1887, Mr. Bryan removed to Lincoln, Neb. which became the base of his entry and career in public life. He served as member of the 52nd and 53rd Congresses, from 1891 to 1895, for the 1st Nebraska district.

In 1894 he was nominated for United States Senator on the Democratic ticket but was defeated by John M. Thurston.

FREE SILVER CAMPAIGN.

Then he became editor of the Omaha World-Herald and was a delegate to the Democratic national convention in 1896. It was here he wrote the "silver plank" in the platform, made the notable, "cross of gold" speech and was nominated for President.

In the campaign that followed he traveled 18,009 miles drawing enormous crowds whom he thrilled by his magnetic and commanding oratory. He received 176 electoral votes against 271 for William McKinley.

Again in 1900 he was nominated for President by the Democratic, Populist and Silver conventions, when "imperialism" was declared to be the issue of the campaign. Bryan was again defeated, receiving 155 electoral votes against 292 for McKinley.

MADE WORLD TOUR.

Bryan then established his magazine The Commoner, made a world tour in 1906. Nominated for President a third time in 1908 he received 162 electoral votes against 321 for William Howard Taft. Mr. Bryan's greatest political coup was at the Democratic national convention in Baltimore in 1912, when Woodrow Wilson was nominated. Later, on March 4, 1913, the day Woodrow Wilson took the oath of office Bryan was sworn in as Secretary of State. He resigned June 9, 1915, having negotiated 30 treaties with governments representing three-fourths of the world's population.

William Jennings Bryan's "Cross of Gold" speech "made" him. It ranked as one of the greatest oratorical efforts of all time. It was made in the Democratic National Convention in Chicago in July, 1896. Here it was that Bryan toed the mark on the start of his spectacular political career.

"Free Silver" delegates dominated that convention, but they were without a presidential nominee. There had been some talk of a man named Bryan from Nebraska, who served two terms in Congress, but had been defeated the third time he ran. He was 36 and "a good talker," but not known outside the West.

STIRRING TRIBUTES PAID TO COMMONER

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York: I heard of the death of Bryan with a great deal of regret. He was a vigorous American, and even those who disagreed with his ideas had a very great regard for him.

U. S. Senator Borah—After going to Washington I came to know Mr. Bryan well and the more closely I came to know him the more I liked and admired him as an individual. The thing that impressed you the more you would see him was his cleanliness in speech and thought, his clean mindedness. He was the greatest lay preacher of his age, of his generation has fought harder or more successfully for ideals. No man will be more sincerely mourned.

Mayor James M. Curley—The death of William Jennings Bryan removes from American life a man whose vision was of such an intensely character, and whose oratory was of such impelling force as to win for him the domination of a great political party for more than one-fifth of the entire existence of the American republic. A crusader for right with the vision of a prophet he gave hope to the toiler and sanity to the capitalist at the critical hour in the life of the American nation. The great Commoner, long recognized as radical, in the closing hour of his life, through advocacy of fundamentalism, became the great conservative.

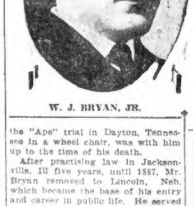
Darrow Differed With Bryan, but Liked Him



W. J. BRYAN, JR.

Elkmont, Tenn., July 26 (A.P..)—"I am pained to hear of the death of onorable William Jennings Bryan," Clarence Darrow, cross-examiner of the Commoner in the trial of John T. Scopes, told the Knoxville Journal.

"I have known Mr. Bryan since 1896 and supported him twice for the presidency. He was a man of strong convictions and always espoused his cause with ability and courage," Mr. Darrow continued. "I differed with him on many qany questions, but always respected his sincerity and devotion. I am very sorry for his family and for his friends who loved him."

Many Threats On Bryan's Life During Trial

Chattanooga, July 27 (A.P.)—Many threats were made against William Jennings Bryan's life during the Dayton trial, it was revealed by Captain Marion Perkins of the Chattanooga officers who policed the town. These threats were ignored by Mr. Bryan, the captain said. He added that he was asked to investigate them, but they were in such numbers that it would have been impracticable.

Attempts were made to frighten Mr. Bryan away from the trial by saying that they would blow up his home, according to Captain Perkins. Most of the warnings were from northern cities and their authors were thought to have been fanatics.

Men in All Walks of Life Pay Tribute to Qualities That Gave Bryan Fame

Tributes to the remarkable qualities of the man and the great deeds of his career were evoked from men all over the nation following the death of William Jennings Bryan.

Vice-President Dawes—I have been a friend of Mr. Bryan for thirty-eight years, since we started as young lawyers in Lincoln, Neb., throughout all these years of work and strenuous public service there shows resplendent a high personal character. In all he did, Mr. Bryan was in earnest and in it all he tried to do good. Those who knew him best respected most his motives and his sincerity. He never did unworthy or mean things. He may have been mistaken at times as we all are, but he was trying always to do the right as he saw it.

Governor Alvan T. Fuller, of Massachusetts—William Jennings Bryan was the foremost Christian layman in the world. Eloquent, honest, unafraid, he stood at Armageddon and battled for the Lord. The Great Commoner was, above all things, sincere and his vast influence was founded on that sincerity. More people have listened to Mr. Bryan than to any other man and more votes have been cast for him for President than for any other individual in the history of the republic. No man

BRYAN FRETTED UNDER IRONY OF DARROW

Bitter Battle for Faith at Scopes Trial Bore Hard on Commoner

By JOHN STUART,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent at the Evolution Trial.

New York, July 27.—The bitter controversy of the Scopes trial must have told more heavily on William Jennings Bryan than he showed.

The day of Clarence Darrow's big speech, opening the argument for the admission of scientific evidence, Bryan showed the strain. He was suffering from prickly heat and the medicinal powder he had put about his cheeks had eyes gave a ghastly tinge over the red of his flushed and sweating face.

Yet he was forced to be still. He had advocated the admission of this evidence. He believed himself able to cope with these scientists on cross-examination. He thought he knew holes in the evolutionary theory through which he could show these men up.

HAD TO SIT SILENT.

But young A. Thomas Stewart, as official prosecutor of the case, was a better lawyer than Mr. Bryan. He knew he could win without risking Bryan against the scientists. At the last moment he dissuaded the Old Warhorse from the battle. Bryan had to sit silent while the case was argued. He took it handsomely—but the restraint galled his soul.

And when his time did come for battle Stewart's judgement was more than vindicated. The test came not against the scientists themselves, on ground of Bryan's choosing. It came against Clarence Darrow, equipped with all the scientists knew, and armed with a lawyer's guile more terrible than any scientists.

Again young Stewart tried to avoid this issue. He objected to the utter irrelevancy of the proceedings. But Bryan refused any longer to appear afraid. He insisted, and the young lawyer and the compliant Judge let him go. It was slaughter.

HEART VS. INTELLECT.

It was Bryan's oratorical knowledge of generalities against Darrow's steel-tipped points of piercing detail; it was the heart of the old War Horse against a machine-gun intellect; it was the mind used to dominating others from the rostrum against the mind used to smashing others in the witness box.

Again and again Bryan tried to shift the ground of battle. He sat in a swivel chair as he testified. Again and again he swung from behind the direct glare of Darrow's blue eyes and the unyielding pressure of Darrow's bitter, materialistic logic to the sea of faces turned up to him under the maple trees.

"I am here to protect the Word of God from the greatest atheist and agnostic in America!" he cried.

LASHED BY DARROW.

And these people with the upturned faces, to whom the Word of God represents all they know of happiness or promise of happiness in this hard life of theirs, poured balm upon his soul with the rebel yell.

But then he had to turn again and expose himelf to Darrow. Darrow was mad.

"You and your fool religion!" he snapped once.

And Darrow pressed home upon Bryan every intellectual absurdity he could master. Unfoundly Bryan stood firm for literal acceptance of Eve's creation from the rib of Adam, of Jonah and the whale, of Joshua and the stilled sun.

"The God I worship," Bryan proclaimed with noble reverence, "can do anything!"

DAMAGING ADMISSION.

But then Darrow made him admit that perhaps the term "day" in the Bible's story of creation might mean 'a very long period of time.' He made him admit it might have taken millions of years to create this earth.

Had the trial been permitted to go on from that admission it would, inevitably, have ruined Bryan's and the State's whole presentation of the prosecution.

More, it might forever have shattered the faith of these simple Bible folk in the Word of God that Bryan sought to protect.

He seemed to realize that he himself had struck that simple faith a blow.

FOUGHT HOLY WAR TO END.

So it was that he began to swing widely as soon as the trial was over. He deluged the press with statements burning with apostolic fervor. He stormed at Darrow, the infidel, and sought to make his infidelism plain. And, despite the heat, despite the bad food, he stayed in Dayton.

His pleasant house in the blow of the trade winds on the Florida beach was calling him. But he saw the defections among the most ardent of his flock, the Tennessee fundamentalists who alone had the courage to enact into law the simple faith he had preached to them.

He stayed in Dayton to renew his holy war. He stayed to preach to mountain hearts shaken by his own admissions. And he stayed to eat Dayton food.

In that sense, the old war horse died gallantly, in harness, face to [illegible]

London, July 27 (A.P.).—M. G. M. Bosworth, chairman of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Lines, died in London. Death followed an operation for appendicitis.

'CONTENTMENT' BIGGEST OF WORDS, SAID BRYAN

Bryan was once asked what he considered the greatest word in the English language, and quickly responded "Contentment." "This world is full of discontented men," he went on; "even some of the rich are not contented. The man who has contentment has the best gold that can be secured in life. The man who can be contented with what he has is the man who finds all that life is worth living for."

TAKEN TOO SOON CRIES WIDOW IN GRIEF

Bryan and Wife Had Talked of His Death: "I Can't Spare Him," She Declares

Dayton, Tenn., July 27 (A.P.)—Speaking of her husband's death today, Mrs. William Jennings Bryan said:

"My husband and I often used to talk about what should be done in such an event. He wanted to be buried in Arlington if it could be arranged. I am trying to arrange it. It was his wish and I think it is proper and fitting, for he battled for America, too, and he battled for the God of his fathers, courageously, unafraid.

"O, I so wanted him to be left for me for a few years. There are so many things that he was needed for. He was writing his memoirs. The world needs his memoirs. They told of the great stretch of American history and we so wanted to make his trip to the Holy Land next February."

One of Mrs. Bryan's first duties was to telegraph the great Commoner's former secretary and intimate friend for many years, Ben G. Davis. He is now at Takoma Park, a suburb of Washington. She wanted him to go through the necessary formalities for the Arlington burial. She also telegraphed her husband's present secretary, Walter Thompson, who was in Dayton with him through the Scopes trial.

Mr. Bryan lies at rest in the north room of the Rogers home. He has a most peaceful expression on his face. It seems as though all one would have to say upon entering the room would be "Mr. Bryan," and he would immediately answer.

Mrs. Bryan is insistent that the funeral and burial of her husband shall be without excessive display.

"We are simple people and we want all arrangements simply made," she told a group of Dayton citizens who has asked permission to pay special honors.

She declined with expressions of appreciation the offer of local residents to form a military guard of honor from Dayton ex-service men to accompany the body to the place of interment.

"Bring all your white clothes; don't bring any black ones," Mrs. Bryan advised her children, with whom she talked over a long distance telephone before they left their homes for the East.

Bryan Was "Speeding" on Last Visit to Boston

Although a familiar figure to many, Bryan's visits to Boston were not many, but his last official public appearance here was at the dedication of the Newsboys' Memorial to "Scotty" in Brookline.

A rare visitor to Boston, the Commoner's time was filled to the last minute, and with only a few minutes to spare tearrive on time at the memorial exercises where hewas the principal speaker, he made the intimate acquaintance of several Boston and Brookline police.

To insure his quick trip to Brookline from Tremont Temple, where he had been speaking, a detail of traffic police was provided to escort Bryan to Brookline.

Mr. Bryan later came to lecture at Harvard, but his lectures were not public.

STORM DAMAGE THOUSANDS; ALL N. E. IS HIT

Bolts Hit Homes; Rain Washes Out the Roads and Floods Big Mills

dwelling was ripped off and a huge hole was torn in the roof.

Fire followed the bolt, but the blaze was speedily extinguished by firemen, responding to a box alarm.

HITS MEDFORD HOME.

In Medford, the single house owned and occupied by John De Mayo at No. 32 Sagamore avenue, was struck by lightning and the fire that resulted damaged the building to the extent of $200. The chimney and a number of clapboards were torn off, but DeMayo and his wife, who were in the house, suffered no injury.

Water rose to such a depth in Medford square that automobiles were flooded out and many had to be pushed through the square by other machines.

The Harvard street railroad underpass was so deep in water that traffic through the cut was impossible, and machines were detoured.

WORCESTER CHURCH STRUCK.

At Worcester, St. Stephen's Roman Catholic Church was struck by a bolt following the early mass. No one was injured. Damage to the edifice is estimated at less than $1,000.

Twelve head of cattle, two horses, a large barn, fifty tons of hay and farm implements to the total value of $12,000 were destroyed by fire caused by a lightning bolt which struck the barn of Joseph Higgins in West Barre.

Previous to the destruction of the Higgins buildings a bolt struck a two-story house owned by John Farigan of Westboro, but the fire department saved it from serious damage.

About the same time the Higgins place was struck lightning put the telephone service out of commission and no calls could be sent to the fire department.

At least one injury occurred as a result of the storm. Grasping a cable in a Haverhill elevator in which the electric wires had been short-circuited by lightning, Elmer F. Bunker, forty-five, of Silver street, Haverhill, was seriously shocked.

After being restored to consciousness by emergency crews of the telephone and electric companis and police department, he was removed to Gale Hospital, where it was said he will recover.

KNOCKED INSENSIBLE.

Bunker, employed by the F. D. Tucker Furniture Company on Merrimack street, went into the elevator in the store and took hold of the cable to run it from the third to the second floor. When he felt the shock tried to let go but was unable to, and when fellow-employes, hearing his shouts for help, shut off the electric current in the building, he dropped to the floor unconscious.

Bunker was revived once and again lapsed into a faint. When he was revived a second time, he was taken to the hospital.

Damage in Hampden County through the bolts and lightning was estimated at half a million dollars.

A veritable cloudburst swept the country, washing out streets, undermining foundations, flooding dwelling-house and business-house cellars, derailing trolley cars and ruining crops.

AVERTS TRAIN WRECK.

At Adams floods following the cloudburst over the Berkshire Hills flooded two mills into Mienesa, throwing 900 employes out of work; halted railroad traffic, interrupted trolley service and brought all business in the community to a virtual standstill, with a total damage of $100,000.

Clarence Hoedecker was the hero of the cloudburst. Enroute to Pittsfield on his way to work, Hoedecker discovered a culvert on the Boston & Albany Railroad washed out and the rails sagging.

Hoedecker ran up the track and flagged an on-coming local passenger train.

The basement of the Renfrew mill was flooded to the depth of seven feet. Belts and other machinery accessories were ruined by the water. Five hundred persons were thrown out of work and damage estimated at $40,000 was done at this plant. Company officials estimated that it would take two weeks to repair the damage.

The weaving department of the Berkshire Cotton Company was flooded, necessitating the closing down of the plant. Damage at the Berkshire Company's plant can be repaired within a day, the 400 operatives employed there were notified.

The water came down in torrents from the hills, washing out roads and flooding the cellars of the south branch of the Hoosac River. Tracks of the North Adams-Pittsfield line of the Berkshire Street Railway Company were under water in several places.

A cow owned by John Reaman was caught up in the rush of water in the valley, lodged against a broken culvert of the railroad and was drowned. Another cow, the property of Frederick Fordine, was struck by lightning and instantly killed.

HAVOC IN LOWELL.

Lightning, which flashed for two hours, put the business section of Lowell temporarily out of commission and left the Merrimac Valley a terrain of splintered trees and telephone poles.

The Christian Science Church was struck, a barn was destroyed completely by fire and 2,000 telephones were out of order. Wires strew the roads, while glass from broken windows gave the city an aspect of cyclonic invasion.

In the Science Church six windows were smashed and a tree alongside of the building sent hundreds of huge slivers from its splintering by the lightning through the open panes into the church. A hundred feet distant from the tree there were evidences of the storm's effect.

The barn f Frank Hutchinson on Westford road, Chelmsford, a suburb, was als struck by lightning during the storm nd then was destroyed by fire. The los was $5,000.

Cattle in the barn were all saved through the efforts of the owner and neighbors.

After raging through several hours, the downpour in the Hub subsided into a drizzle, which Forecaster Loveland said would clear away tonight. He forecast a fair, moderately warm day for Tuesday with bright and cooler weather for mid-week.

Essen, Germany, July 27 (A.P.)—The evacuation of this city by the French, marking the second phase of the evacuation of the Ruhr, which has been occupied by allied troops since January, 1923, is in full swing. The court building and police prefecture have been taken over by the German authorities, and most of the French troops have left the city. July 31 will see the complete evacuation of the Ruhr, the various towns and cities four handed back to the eGrman authorities under the terms of the London agreement.

$850,000 FOR SARGENT'S PAINTINGS; SETS RECORD

London, July 27 (A.P.)—A total of 175,260 pounds sterling, or, roughly, $850,000, has been paid for 237 pictures by John Singer Sargent during the auction of the works of the American artist. This is believed to be a record for the sale of paintings by a single artist. The sale closed today.

Bryan Gave Last Battle to Fly in His Room

Dayton, Tenn., July 27.—A spirit of fight that all men know was with Bryan until the last. When he retired for his last sleep the flies had been bothering him and he was killing them with a fly swatter. As he disposed of the last one he laughed and called to his wife:

"Well, I got that one," and closed his eyes for the long rest.

SEVEN KILLED, SCORE HURT BY AUTOS

Driver of Car Which Caused Death of Little Boy Injured in Crash Later

Despite the indemency of the weather, which reduced the number of automobiles on the highways by fully fifty per cent., the death and injury toll over the week-end was high. Seven persons were killed and a score injured in accidents throughout New England.

The dead are:

Frank Clinton, twenty-five years old, Union street, Brighton; Dominic Orseni, fifty-nine, No. 160 Water street, Wakefield; Henry Wilke, five years old, No. 21 Highland avenue, Pittsfield; Clifford Thebedeau, eighteen years old, Franklin; H. Oscar Matthews, seventy-five years old, Concord, N. H.; Mrs. Magloire Soulce, Siegas, N. B., at Van Buren, Me., and Michael Francioni, No. 467 Main street, Worcester.

Clinton was killed at Onset while driving a truck which ran into a telephone pole. He had gone to Hyannis with the truck to haul canoes to Boston after the regatta. Raniel E. Doherty of No. 25 Snow street, Bright, a passenger on the truck, was slightly injured. A third man ran away.

Dominic Orseni, fifty, florist of Wakefield, died at the Melrose Hospital from a fracture of the skull suffered in an automobile accident near his home.

The accident was caused when a rear wheel came off and the car was wrecked.

Patrick Condron of Pittsfield was severely injured when the automobile which he was driving hit a wagon, after running over and killing-five-year-old Henry Wilkie, No. 21 Highland avenue, that city.

Clifford Thebedeau, eighteen, died at Franklin, shortly after the motorcycle he was operating crashed into a telephone pole. His companion, Romeo McGary, escaped serious injury.

H. Oscar Mathews, seventy-five, died at Concord, N. H., when the auto in which he was riding was in collision with another machine.

Mrs. Magloire Soulce of Siegas, N. B., was struck and killed as she was alighting from an auto in which she had returned from church at Van Buren, Me., and was struck by another car, operated by Philip Michaud of that town.

Michael Francioni of No. 467 Main street, Providence, was instantly killed in North Main street, Sharon, when he was struck by an automobile operated by Thomas B. Rennis, a special police officer in Barnstable and living in Cotuit. Rennis was held on a charge of manslaughter. Francioni had alighted to fix a tire.

MAN MAY LOSE NOSE BITTEN DURING FIGHT

Joseph Rozano, twenty-eight years old, of Hull street, Hingham, will probably lose his nose as the result of bites received, police say, in a brawl.

Officers Edward McKee and Fred Magner of the Hingham police arrested Dominic DePantic and Dominic Defoeo, both of Hull street. They denied biting Rozano, but admitted participation in a fight. At the Weymouth Hospital physicians said they feared Rozano's nose was so badly mutilated by bites that amputation would be necessary.

FENWAY'S FILM BILL FULL OF GOOD THINGS

Ray Griffiths in 'Paths to Paradise' Heads Trio of New Pictures

The selection of "Paths to Paradise," featuring Ray Griffiths of "Hitch Hat" fame to lead the film bill at the Fenway Theatre this week proved to be a happy one.

Were it not for the name of the inimitable funmaker appearing with the title one might imagine that this latest Paramount production was some sort of a social problem complex. As it is, the only complex arising from a view of the photoplay is a laughter complex.

The film is a series of laughter-provoking situations that are cleverly brought out under such skilful direction that every range of humor is touched and the result was a well satisfied audience.

Virginia Warwick does a very acceptable bit of acting in "The Handicap" and topping off the bill is a third dimension film called "Ouch."

Lloyd G. del Castillo, as usual, was at the organ and as usual his offerings soothe the savage breast as music is intended to do in a moving picture house, but so often fails short of the mark.

DOG LOCATES BODY OF POISON VICTIM

Westmore, Vt., July 27.—The body of Ralph Sylvester of Cranston, R. I., was found in the bushes here lying beside a roadster.

The body was discovered by Leslie Stoddard of this town, who was fishing nearby. Stoddard's dog barked constantly and led the way to the clump of bushes.

The coroner stated that he believed the cause of death was poisoning. A note to Mrs. Sylvester in Auburn, R. I., said in substance that he was going to take his life.

ROXBURY FIRE IS PROBED BY POLICE

Investigation of the Nightingale apartment building fire at Folsom and Dudley streets, Roxbury, was being vigorously prosecuted by State officials and the police today.

It appeared to the investigators that the fire started near a freight elevator shaft at the second floor and had followed the shaft to the sixth floor where it mushroomed. Smoke from the fire circulated through all the floors above the second and was especially severe on the top floor. The fire was stopped before it went through the roof.

Lives of three aged women were saved through the heroic work of firemen.

Fifteen families, comprising at least 45 persons were driven pell-mell in the street. Four alarms were turned in, and the fire was conquered with damage of $15,000 to the building and $25,000 to contents.

The three women saved were sent to City Hospital where they are recovering from shock and exposure. They are:

Mrs. Emma Sanderson, 78 years old; Eliza Bird, 75 years old, an invalid, and her sister Sarah, 76 years old. All lived in top floor apartments of the 5-story brick structure.

Thousands gathered in the streets saw the thrilling rescues.

HEROIC ACT.

William F. Walsh of Ladder 4, who was one of the first firemen to reach the top floor, where the flames were shooting from windows, heard screams from Mrs. Sanderson, trapped in her apartment. Walsh dashed through the smoke and flames and broke down the door to the apartment.

With all retreat cut off, he seized the aged woman and crawled out onto a coping only a foot wide, extending around the building under the top story windows.

Walsh's comrades from the street below quickly swung a huge, aerial truck into position. In another minute its spindly ladders were shooting skyward, the top coming to rest on the ledge close beside Walsh.

CROWD CHEERS.

Grasping the ladder Walsh swung Mrs. Sanderson over his shoulder and safely descended. An ambulance waited in the street and the woman was quickly borne to the hospital.

The cheers of the crowd had scarce died away when a second heroic rescue was enacted.

Ladderman McGinnis, Donahue and Manning, fighting the flames on the top floor, heard screams from the aged Bird sisters. Their apartment was one cut off by the flames and the firemen crawled around the coping on the Folsom street side of the building to the window from which the sisters were waving and calling for help.

They were carried out of the window, and along the narrow ledge by the firemen to a window from which the stairs could be reached, and then down to the street.

HAMMOND SEES LITTLE DANGER IN COAL STRIKE

Engineering Expert Confers With President Coolidge at White Court

The dangers arising from the proposed strike of the anthracite miners was minimized by John Hays Hammond, chairman of the Fact Finding Commission of the strike of 1923, following conferences Mr. Hammond has held with President Coolidge at White Court.

"The President's view," he said, "is that it would be premature to assume that this dispute is not going to be settled within the industry. "If by any chance, however, occasion should arise for President Coolidge to exert his influence in an effort to compose the situation, I believe he could rally public support as have few other Presidents.

VAGUE THREATS MADE.

"He enjoys public confidence and affection and such as no other executive since the days of James Munroe and the 'era of good feeling.' Should the time come to act, the President will find all political parties united in one effort to aid him and to adjust differences between operators and miners and thus terminate the strike."

Mr. Hammond likened the present conference at Atlantic City, where negotiations are being carried on between operators and miners, with the 1923 coal situation, except in one particular.

"Some vague threats are being made of a simultaneous walkout in the bituminous district," he said. "I cannot conceive on what grounds this could be justified, since the union has signed a three-year agreement at the wartime high wage scale. This contract has a year and a half to run.

SOFT COAL NON-UNION.

"Nearly 70 per cent, of the bituminous production at present is coming from non-union territory. It hardly seems possible that the union would call out the men of those surviving operators who are continuing to meet the full requirements of the Jacksonville agreement.

"Dspite the fact that the talk of a coal shortage bears the brand of manufactured stuff, the public should not ignore the possibilities of the situation. It should take the middle ground between panic and lethargy. Each consumer should appraise for himself the possibilities of the situation and lay in such reserves as his judgment dictates."

The speaker asserted that if a strike should come it would not be a serious one and that the public could exert a powerful influence on the Atlantic City negotiations to avert a strike.

PRONE SYSTEM REVIVES HYDE PARK GAS VICTIM

Joseph Hein, sixty-six, unmarried, of No. 30 Bradlee street, Hyde Park, who was found unconscious in his room as a result of inhaling illuminating gas, owes his life largely to Patrolman Andrew Smith and Charles Massilla, who by means of the "prone system" of treatment patiently persisted in, restored respiration so that before the patient reached City Hospital in the police ambulance he had practically recovered.

NOW'S THE TIME TO GIVE TO POLICE FUND

Benjamin Alexander Contributions Will Wind Up on August 7

Generosity is an outstanding trait of the American people.

Never in the history of this country has an appeal for aid for a worthy purpose gone out that the response has not been generous—in most cases it has been almost prodigal.

The Benjamin Alexander fund, being raised by the Boston Evening American, makes an appeal to the generosity of the people of Boston and Massachusetts that we cannot believe will go unanswered.

The fund is growing, but the time to give is NOW. Following the big all-star show at the Waldron Casino, on August 1, the fund will close and the opportunity to participate in this worthy movement will be gone forever.

The purpose of the fund is early explained—and it appeal to human sympathy is irresistible.

Benjamin Alexander was a policeman on the Boston force. Also, Benjamin Alexander was a good citizen. He had an excellent wife and together they were raising a family of six young children.

A policeman's pay isn't much. When the rent was paid, the store bills settled and the six little codgers provided with shoes and clothing, there wasn't much to lay aside. Any parent realizes this.

But Benjamin Alexander and his wife planned for the year to come. When the children were grown they would save money for their old days.

Then a terrible fate stepped in. Benjamin Alexander, faithful to his duty as to his wife and six little ones, was searching for a criminal. His search led him to the Pickwick Club. Scarcely had he entered that ill-fated club on the morning of July 4 when the building collapsed and Benjamin Alexander and forty-three others lost their lives in the ruins.

The Alexander home in the twinkling of an eye became the stalking place of tragedy and woe.

Mrs. Alexander is bravely trying to carry on—but the load is too much for the frail shoulders of a woman.

The Boston Evening American fund is stepping in to lighten that burden. Benjamin Alexander died in the public service as surely as the heroes of the nation died in France in 1918.

Send in your contribution today. The amount doesn't matter, if the people of Boston can be awakened to the tragedy that has taken a mother and her six little ones as victims.

Benjamin Alexander is dead—his troubles are over, but a mother and her brood are left behind. Will you help to feed and clothe the six little orphans of Officer Alexander? We think you will. Send in your contribution, NOW.

MOTHER, HIT BY AUTO, SAVES CHILDREN

Run Down by Unlicensed Driver at Nantasket and Painfully Hurt

At the risk of her own life and at the cost of injuries, Mrs. Frank S. Lantz of No. 25 Arch street, Boston, rescued her two small children from the path of an unlicensed driver.

Mrs. Lantz was crossing the highway near the corner of Bay street and Moreland avenue, Nantasket, when she saw a big touring car bearing down upon her. Even as the car struck her, she pushed the two children, two and four years old, to the sidewalk and safety.

The driver sped away, but bystanders noted the registration number. Motorcycle Officer Carl Monday gave chase and overhauled the machine a quarter of a mile away. He arrested the driver, who said he was James Walsh of Dorchester, on charges of operating without a license and driving away from the scene of an accident.

Mrs. Lantz will recover.

BEAUTY IN BREEZE MAKERS

An electric fan that will just give a breeze is not a difficult thing to find, but to find an efficient breeze-maker which is at the same time beautiful is an achievement.

It is all very well for Father to have in his office a sad looking black fan, with more or less rusty blades, but in our homes, we women certainly want a fan that has the stamp of good taste.

I hope that those of you who are thinking of buying an electric fan (and I believe everyone has about made up their mind that it is an excellent investment in health and comfort) will look into the famous Westinghouse Home Fans that come in old ivory and nickel, a combination that harmonizes with almost any home decorations. I know you will be delighted with their beauty.

Then, too, Westinghouse fans deliver more air with less current and best of all they are silent. Haven't you noticed how most fans rattle and roar? Westinghouse fans just gently whisper coolness.

Beauty, power, silence! What more can you ask from a breeze-maker? They come at all prices, and my personal opinion is that the question we should ask ourselves isn't "Can I afford an electric fan," but "Can I afford to be without one?"

Those long, hot nights, when the baby cries and mosquitoes squeeze themselves through the netting and make night hideous and you can fairly feel the humidity steaming around you—such nights can be made unbroken stretches of dreamless sleep if you have a Westinghouse in your bedroom, with its face turned towards the ceiling so that no draft blows directly on you, but the air is cooled and kept in constant motion.

I will be glad to tell you about the different sizes, prices and types best suited for home use, if you will drop me a line. If you haven't a fan, really you don't know what you are missing in calm, cool comfort.

Recipes for Part of Today's Menu

COCOANUT MOLDS WITH SAT-TEN SAUCE

3 tbsps. cornstarch, 1c
3 tbsps. cold milk, 1c
¼ cup powdered sugar, 1c
⅛ tsp. salt
¾ cup shredded cocoanut, 8c
3 egg whites, 13c

Mix the cornstarch with three tablespoons cold milk; add salt, sugar and two cups of milk. Cook in double boiler twenty minutes, stirring constantly. Add cocoanut and cut and fold in the whites of eggs, beaten until stiff. Turn into molds, chill and serve with Sat-Ten Pudding Sauce.

SAT-TEN PUDDING SAUCE

Heat the contents of a 20c jar of Sat-Ten Sauce in a smooth saucepan; bring to a boil, and serve hot or cold as preferred.

Total cost of Cocoanut Molds with Sauce, 51c. Serves 4. Cost per person, 13c.

CRAB MEAT AND TOMATO SALAD

Line a salad bowl with lettuce leaves (10c), which have been washed and crisped; arrange in separate piles on the lettuce 1 can of Namco Crab Meat (35c); 4 chopped hard boiled eggs (20c); ½ cup of cucumbers cut in dice (10c); 3 small tomatoes (8c), peeled and cut in eighths. Between the piles place strips of green pepper, free from seeds (5c); make a nest of hearts of lettuce in the center of the salad and fill with Mazola Mayonnaise (12c); sprinkle chili powder or paprika over the mayonnaise. Delicious.

Total cost of Salad, with dressing, $1.00. Serves 4. Cost per person, 25c.

MANY USES FOR STALE BREAD

Too Valuable to Waste

Very early in my housekeeping career—thanks to a thrifty mother-in-law—I learned to feel really sinful every time I threw away a scrap of stale bread. She taught me many uses for even the tiniest scrap, and because it is the small leaks that keep the bride's pocketbook empty, I am going to pass along some of her hints in the hope that they will be as helpful to others as they were to me.

First the crumbs. Every little crust should be saved and dried in the oven and ground through a medium fine knife in your food chopper, and then stored in glass jars for breading croquettes, chops, etc. You have no idea how often you will go to this jar.

The pieces of bread left from a meal can be made into a great variety of delicious toasts. For instance Cinnamon Toast is made by cutting stale bread in quarter inch slices, removing the crust, toasting it, spreading with butter, and then with sugar and cinnamon, mixed in the proportion of three parts of sugar to one part of cinnamon. Cut these slices into triangles and let stand in the oven until sugar is melted.

Baker's bread is ideal for toast making, and to my mind Hathaway's is the equal of any baker's bread ever baked. It cuts without crumbling and is fine grained. Of course I am prejudiced for Hathaway's because I have seen it baked several times and know just how good the ingredients are that go into it.

When making milk toast cut the bread quite thin and crisp it very dry. Oven baked toast is best. I either make my milk toast with just plain scalding hot milk, salted, with a lump of butter melted in it, or I thicken the milk a little and add to it about half a cup of mild cheese put through a food chopper. If you will add a dash of Halford's Sat-Ten sauce you will have all the snap of a Welsh rarebit without its indigestibility.

Tomato cream toast made with Hathaway's bread is excellent, too. This is made by melting three tablespoons of butter in a saucepan and when it bubbles add three tablespoons of flour and ¼ teaspoon of salt. Then add 1½ cups of stewed and strained tomatoes in which you have stirred ½ of a teaspoon of soda. Next add 1 cup of scalding hot cream. Dip slices of crisp toast into this sauce and serve immediately. A little cheese may be added to this, too, if you like it.

SIMPLIFY YOUR SUMMER COOKERY

Cooking Oil a Time Saver

When I say "cooking oil," you are sure I am going to talk about Mazola, aren't you? You guessed exactly right, I am. Because Mazola will help you to spend many a cool moment on the porch this Summer that otherwise might have been spent in creaming solid fats for cakes and in tiresome pie-making.

It has been a real pleasure to receive a large number of letters from our club members who say that they always used lard or butter in their cooking until I told them about Mazola, but now they wouldn't be without a can in the house for the world. It certainly does come in handy many times during the day as a shortening in making bread, rolls, baking powder biscuits and cakes, for pancakes and waffles (Mazola certainly does make the crispest, brownest waffles I ever ate, and they don't slump two minutes after leaving the waffle iron, either) And for cake and pie-making Mazola is a summer time blessing.

No more tedious creaming of butter and sugar with Mazola on hand. You can go by any of your favorite cake recipes, using one-quarter to one-third less of Mazola than the usual shortening. Of course your cake batter will be a little thinner than that made with butter, as the fat is all in liquid form, but you will find it very tender and delicious.

Don't beat your cake batter after the flour is added unless you want a coarse cake, and do be sure to use pastry flour for all your cakes, as it makes tender cakes of fine grain. For the "riddles" gingersnaps and Cry Baby cookies (they are delicious, as wholesome. Would you like the recipe?) and for sugar cookies, too, Mazola cannot be improved on. And those of you who have had trouble in making cream puffs will, I am sure, find your problem solved if you use Mazola for shortening.

Have you your copy of the 65-page Mazola recipe book that contains excellent recipes for everything from soup to nuts? I will be glad to send you one.

NEW CRAB MEAT RECIPES

In Folder Just Published

The wise housewife is using shellfish on her menus as much as possible this weather and her appreciative family is properly grateful. She'll be grateful to me, too, I know, for telling her about the new collection of crab recipes that has just been published by the North American Mercantile Co. who put up the famous Namco Crab Meat.

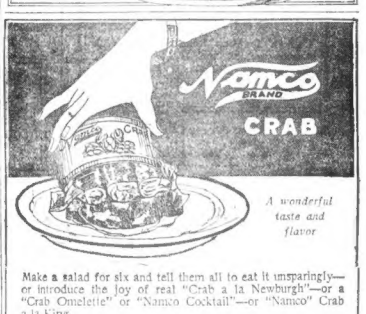
This booklet, which is just off the press, is beautifully gotten up in colors and the recipes are appetizing, unusual and flavored with good sense. The leaflet starts off with a delicious crab meat chowder, then comes a recipe for French omelet with crab meat and the illustration fairly makes you hungry. Then come directions for preparing crab meat with eggs, and with mushrooms. There is a splendid recipe for crab meat cocktail, and one for crab bisque which you will surely enjoy. Most of us are familiar with the various forms of creamed crab meat, on toast, with vegetables, with potato border, with cheese au gratin and with macaroni, and there is the always popular crab meat Newburg.

Peppers and tomatoes stuffed with crab meat are unusual and there is an especially delicious recipe for halibut fillets with crab-stuffed green peppers.

The recipes for crab meat patties, crab meat a la King and some delicious salads follow—cucumber salad, a molded crab salad that is wonderful for a party, and a crab meat and tomato salad that is excellent. You'll find this recipe elsewhere on this page.

This salad combination makes nice sandwich fillings, too. And a Crab Club Sandwich with a bottle of Canada Dry ginger ale would win a smile from the most tired T. B. M.

Do let me send you this attractive new book and when you next buy crab meat think of Namco, the kind that comes in big, juicy, solid lumps instead of shreds.



Make a salad for six and tell them all to eat it unsparingly—or introduce the joy of real "Crab a la Newburgh"—or a "Crab Omelette" or "Namco Cocktail"—or "Namco" Crab a la King.

The RED LACQUER CASE

by PATRICIA WENTWORTH

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

SECOND SECTION

BOSTON, MONDAY, JULY 27, 1925

A Thrilling Novel of Love and Adventure, Mystery and Intrigue That Every-One Will Want to Read

If you find a misstatement or error in any edition of the Boston Evening American, please notify Managing Editor, Liberty 4000.

WHILE Sally was fleeing from Lazare, Sascha saw her but the spy did not. Sascha determined on something desperate.

Sascha ran, and thought of what five years in prison would be like, as threatened by Lazare. His heart failed him and he checked and almost stopped. His hands would grow like Lazare's hands, ugly and thick and coarse, and they would never make music any more. He would never play again. They would kill his music. Five years! But Lazare would torture Sally. She was so brave she would not open the case for threats.

They would torture her, and worse. Five years—his music—Sally—prison—and his music fell away into the shadowed background of his mind. There remained Sally only Sally, whom he loved and who would never never care for him as all whom Lazare would torture, was Sally.

He lifted up his voice and cried bearcely.

"Lazare Lazare Lazare."

The beam of light rested falling across two high black pillars with a lane between them leafy plaza each leaf picked out by the intense white entrance to the box walk Lazare hated just as he was about to enter the path half turned, and called back over his shoulder:

"What is it?"

"Lazare—here she was—I saw her," panted Sascha, and Lazare turned the beam of light sweeping from the path he was coming nearer, leaving the Sascha even. He threw up his arms to shield them, and Lazare was by his side.

"You saw her?"

"Yes, from the window

CURLEY IN BUILDING WAR PARLEY

Offers to 'Adopt' Parents of Baby Seeking Home

WOULD GIVE ALL THREE A HOME

Mrs. W. F. White Wants Frances Marion Paul, but Prefers to Do Great Good

Baby Frances Marion Paul wants a home.

Mrs. William F. White, No. 12 Decatur street, Boston, wants a baby.

So when Mrs. White saw Frances Marion's picture in the Boston Evening American she wrote at once to say that a home, love and the best of care were awaiting the little one.

And that isn't all. Mrs. White is willing to give a home to the baby's mother and father until they are on their feet and able to take care of their child.

"My husband and I have been married seven years," said Mrs. White, "and we have always wanted a baby. Only before we adopted a request for adoption but there was someone just ahead of us and so we didn't get that one. It was terribly disappointing."

HOME FOR MOTHER.

Mrs. White's home spotlessly clean and neat, bears evidence of the fact that the owner loves children. On top of the piano that is the living room, are placed several dolls dressed with baby clothes. Garments for all sizes have been provided to put on a baby.

"At first I only wanted to adopt the little one," explained Mrs. White, "but we later thought we got a good job very soon and they would be sorry to have part with the baby. I would be glad to take the baby and I'd rather her get back to her mother too. Her mother could go to work if she was not obliged to remain. It would be just as much like her own home as we could make it."

Mrs. White's eyes trembled with earnestness as she spoke of her longing for a daughter to complete the happiness of her home.

"If she insisted that she would like to give up the baby I should be glad to take it—but I know how I'd feel if it was mine; so I want to give them a chance to get their home together again if possible."

HELPED ANOTHER FAMILY.

"We shall have plenty of room. If Mrs. Paul and her husband would come and see us and talk things over I am sure we could satisfy them."

Mrs. White's eyes were filled with longing as she said:

"If only she could be mine for her very own."

Mr. White is generous. He is too rare she wants to be sure that the best home for the baby is secured and made.

It isn't the first time she has taken such a child. Like a wrecked home and make it possible for happiness to replace sorrow.

There was an hour when Mrs. White could find no way out of her difficulty other than by parting with her beloved baby. Mrs. White took her and the child and the husband and father was able to provide for his little family.

"I was heartbroken when that baby left," Mrs. White confessed. "It was so pretty and so good and we just loved it. But that mother has her baby now and she won't have been with it if she had parted with it for good."

"If there is one way that I can help Mr. Paul and the family. We haven't a great deal, but we always have enough to eat and we are comfortable and as soon as he can get work and get on his feet he could pay us a little rent if he wanted to, but I'm sure that wouldn't be necessary."

HUSBAND AGREES.

"You see, some day I might need help from somebody—one can never tell—and while I am able I should like to do what little I can for others."

With pathetic eagerness Mrs. White disguised her little desire. "You see, she'd be company for me while my husband is out and I'd look after them and I'm sure they'd be company for me. I don't want to say anything to influence Mr. Paul one way or the other, but I'd like the baby. I would make her very happy."

Mr. White who also enjoys the Boston Evening American, and his wife that there is nothing to do but wait. That letter might get a good job very soon and they would be sorry to have part with the baby. I would be glad to take the baby and I'd rather her get back to her mother too. Her mother could go to work if she was not obliged to remain. It would be just as much like her own home as we could make it."

There was an hour when Mrs. White could find no way out of her difficulty other than by parting with her beloved baby. Mrs. White took her and the child and the husband and father was able to provide for his little family.

"I was heartbroken when that baby left," Mrs. White confessed. "It was so pretty and so good and we just loved it. But that mother has her baby now and she won't have been with it if she had parted with it for good."

"If there is one way that I can help Mr. Paul and the family. We haven't a great deal, but we always have enough to eat and we are comfortable and as soon as he can get work and get on his feet he could pay us

OPENS HOME TO 3 ON BABY'S PLEA

Mrs. William F. White of No. 12 Decatur street, has made a proposal probably unique in the annals of Boston charity. Not only is she willing to adopt tiny Frances Marion Paul, shown in the lower photograph, but she has offered a home to the baby's parents until their finances get straightened out. Then she'll give Frances Marion back if they wish.

RED SOX OPEN LONG HOME STAY TOMORROW

CLEVELAND TO BE FIRST OPPONENT

Fohlmen Will Battle All Western Nines and Mackmen Before Departing

By NICK FLATLEY.

THE village, after the last two exciting weeks, had a vacation today to restore the old equilibrium. There was no baseball scheduled, apart from the Twilight affairs, and four minor engagements. The Red Sox after a dismal road trip, come home tomorrow to open the longest home stand of the year. They close on all the western clubs and the Athletics before going away again into the cold, cruel outer world.

The Fohl's boys found said world very cruel. They didn't win any series, and only managed to take two from Detroit. The cubs pitching was knocked all over the alley by Cobb. The Sox did quite a bit of batting, but it didn't mean a thing.

President Bob Quinn is on the well known verge of distraction. He has been seeking small league talent for immediate delivery, but not getting many results. The good boys he can buy must remain with their minor clubs until the end of the campaign.

President Bob has seven young men all paid for, who will report here in September. He tried to get them immediately, but there was no action. The minor leaguers didn't think enough of the Sox secondary talent to do any swapping, and they refused to listen to the dollar argument.

The Fenway president knows, and admits, that his ball team will not do.

"I cleaned out after last year," he explains, "and thought I had enough material for a good, new start. But I was wrong. So I must clean up again in the Fall. We'll have a different team next year. Three or four boys we trailed along with will be moved, so they'll get the air.

The Boston fans have been more than fair, and I feel like a burglar when I look at the stand sites. But I see now there's nothing to do. As soon as the new kids get through with their new seasons they'll go to the front. We'll find out if our choices have the stuff. If they have we'll get others. Perhaps we have been for gosh darn bad for lowbrows it. He has had to pay higher rates than anybody in the last ten years. SHARKEY SHOWS HOW TO EXERCISE

By JACK SHARKEY.
(New England Heavyweight Champion.)

I have been asked if rowing is a good form of exercise.

Yes, if done in moderation.

Rowing as Boxing Commissioner Eugene Hoyle will tell you, is one of the best forms of exercise in the world to develop the chest. In the Winter we all lose flesh and grow weak and flabby. We get down to the scales but we develop the chest as well as the back shoulders and arm muscles.

I do not favor four mile crew races. They take too much out of an athlete. The two mile races are almost as harmful, as the oarsmen are obliged to set a terrific pace all the way.

Ordinary rowing, though, is beneficial. It also keeps one out in the open air which is very important.

This is also the reason so many men and women get healthful recreation out of yachting. It keeps one out in the great outdoors.

Today's photographs illustrate the proper way to stand. If you stand correctly you are continually improving your health. Stand erect and as easily as possible. Keep the head up and the shoulders back. This keeps the chest thrown out and results in deep breathing. Let your hands drop easily by your side, your feet close together.

I sincerely hope these exercises will prove of advantage to you.

May I ask you again to exercise in the open air when possible.

"Don't worry.

Forget dollar signs and engage in healthful recreation.

Keep your mind off business cares during play hours.

If you do these things, you will get more enjoyment out of life and live to a ripe old age.

Marblehead Yachts Active

Despite the rain and lack of wind both the Corinthian and Eastern Yacht Clubs succeeded in sailing their regular Saturday morning events off Marblehead. The Q. R. and S. raced out to the special trophies inside, the scores of the Eastern Yacht Club and the course as well the usual 30 team match and the races for the Bailey Prize.

The races of the "Qs" for the trophy given by Mrs. H. Dexter Bacon, that of the "Rs" for the Eastern Yacht Club cup and the somewhat "S" for the trophy donated by Mrs. Geo. Lemist were windward and leeward events of four miles each, making the total measure seven hours and fifteen minutes.

Five of the 25-ft. one design class raced for the Hank the Kenora, the Sally XIII, the No. eight III and the Sea eagle. The Hawk landed home a winner by nearly a two minute margin.

Only two of the 30 class I yachts raced for the cups of the Re. Norman and Yankee. The latter was placed to the weather of Nine Man as they crossed the starting line and the Yankee held to the advantage all the way out to the turn and back again to the finish.

In the Herreshoff S. knockabout class Robert Lemon with the Wolfgram repeated his performance of Saturday in the opening event of the Corinthian Yacht Club's leading club of the class across the line.

The Thayer team defeated the Shuman team in the O' team match under the rules of the Corinthian Yacht Club.

Only nine of the Rental Regatta showed up for the sport two to a canoe except for the second which had three competitors. Two new winners registered for the first time—Stanley Parker with the Little Dipper, in the second division, and Miss Alleen Chapple with the Gee Whiz, in the third division.

Standard Tennis Ball Ordered

New York, July 27 (A. P.).—Tennis throughout the world in 1926 will be played with the nearest approach to a standard ball that machinery can produce as the result of a decision by the International Lawn Tennis Federation fixing the limits of the spheres compression under pressure to not more than 31/2 of an inch nor less than 29 of an inch.

The decision results from an investigation by a committee of four from France, England, Australia and the United States which was appointed to examine into the question of compression after it had been found that the ball used in several countries varied by a wide margin in the degree of rebound from the ground.

This condition which prevailed in spite of the fact that the federation had adopted specifications governing size, weight and height of rebound was found to be due to the fact that no two manufacturers employed the same formula regarding the hardness of the ball.

Tests made by the committee showed the ball made in England and used at Wimbledon to be much harder than the American sphere. It consequently increased American players as being heavy, while the American product seemed light and flighty to English players.

The new specification which goes into effect January 1 will require the English ball to be softened and the American sphere to be hardened.

Lesson No. 21—the 'C' Battery

Radio fans today are probably less familiar with the "C" battery and its use, than with any other part of radio. The reason for this is obvious. Most of the sets used in the past have never used "C" batteries. As a matter of fact, a "C" battery is of no great advantage unless "B" voltages in excess of 67½ are used. This depends largely upon the characteristics of the tubes. The main use of a "C" battery is in connection with audio frequency amplifiers

They are connected in series with the grids of the amplifying tubes with the negative or minus terminal nearest the grid. Most radio sets today which are designed for loudspeaker reproduction use 90 volts of "B" battery. With such a set it is customary to use a standard 9½ volt "C" battery. The function of the "C" battery is to improve the tone and to prohibit any excessive drain upon the "B" battery. There is no current drain from a "C" battery.

A frock of lace is sketched at the left. It is in deep cream, coarsely woven small pattern, and is made over a black satin underslip. Cream net is set in on the skirt by tiny pipings of black crepe de Chine and this is also seen on the bodice. A large hat of cream crinoline with a black velvet sash around the crown is worn with this ensemble.

A Lanvin creation is shown at the right. It is of a straight frock cut on straight low-waisted lines and has long tight sleeves. From the line below the waist flowing strips of the materials are placed. They do not overlap, but are placed just next to one another. The scarflike collar may be worn open or closed.

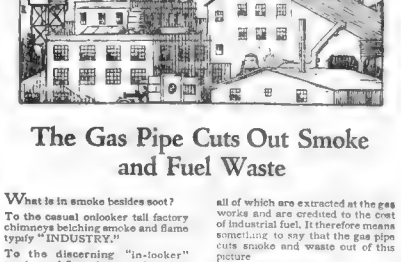
The Gas Pipe Cuts Out Smoke and Fuel Waste



What is in smoke besides soot?

To the casual onlooker tall factory chimneys belching smoke and flame typify "INDUSTRY."

To the discerning "in-looker" smoke and flame belching from factory chimneys denote EXPENSE, WASTE, POLLUTION.

Modern science has made it possible to look into smoke and see the real losses which it cloaks.

There are over two hundred different ingredients in the smoke which passes out of your factory chimneys. You have paid for all these in the purchase price of your fuel. Among these ingredients are appreciable quantities of creosote, benzol, tar, gas, ammonia and a long list of other things of commercial value, all of which are extracted at the gas works and are credited to the cost of industrial fuel. It therefore means something to say that the gas pipe cuts smoke and waste out of this picture

Besides WASTE, you have the EXPENSE of receiving, storage, handling, ash disposal, etc.

Gas Fuel, 100% usable, delivered at your factory through gas pipes, cuts out this smoke and waste. It is cleanly —no ash, soot or dust. It is instantaneous —a constant supply at all times. It is perfectly controllable— furnishing any desired gradation of heat. It requires no storage before or after using. You pay only for what you use, after it has been used —eliminating investment of large sums in fuel for future use.

You can have this efficient Gas Fuel geared to the specific conditions of your business and your plant by our trained Industrial Engineers. It costs nothing to investigate this service which is now furnished to over 1600 Boston concerns. Ask us

A WIFE'S MEDITATIONS

One thing that inspires a woman to divorce is to come home, after watching a movie picture lover for two thrilling hours and be greeted by a perspiring man with golf hands and a tattered book, who demands to know when dinner will be ready

A woman's vanity is like a sensitive plant—bruise it and it shrivels up; a man's is solid rock—hit it and it bruises you.

Sharp Sounds

At that precise moment a sharp sound disturbed the air. We knew it was caused by the fall of a pane of glass, the opening of a window or door, or their equivalent in some neighboring flat. If it is never the noises, the effect throw them into each other's arms.

With Beauchamp Foster's yellow hair caressing her forehead with her limpid fingers smoothing out the hollows of his cheeks. Ted chose that exact moment to say: "Have I told you anything for you? Even money? But you mustn't grow old. I love your nice brown hair and your pink cheeks and your hair mine. But don't you dare to grow old, Ted, because I'm in love with you over. Never did like old men.

And then there flashed across Ted's inner consciousness the vision of his wife—he only woman he had ever known who really understood the deeper significance of love. After ages had been married for nine years she had an intimate and eyes meeting

"Ted, dear, don't worry about my hope. You see I never cared much about external appearances. It's the underneath not which really counts."

Ted Crane was dumbfounded by this image, so much so that he forgot what he had intended to say. He was, however, relieved by a swift gesture. He was annoyed by Mary's "practical" family, and died from the room.

Three hours later, what seemed all of a sudden an eternity to Ted, he came into the realization of a magical dream. He came back, let back into a normal life, to his own apartment and he

Three Minutes Journeys

By Temple Manning

THE New Year is celebrated far [illegible] in Persia than in the Western world. No mere a [illegible] but a month [illegible] and [illegible] festivities. And [illegible] golden opportunities to the begging dervishes who are so numerous throughout the country.

Under ordinary circumstances the begging dervish wends his way along the street, with dignity and piety stamped upon his face. Occasionally they stop and offer a flower or a lemon, for which you must give a coin.

But matters change around New Year's.

He chooses his victim and he is careful to choose one who is wealthy. Then he literally camps beside the doorstep until he has achieved his purpose.

He makes his temporary home quite comfortable and settles there with his little garden, consisting of a mud pile decorated with flowers and pebbles and beads. Here he sits, quietly smoking his pipe. All of his early belongings are gathered about him. His wooden stick studded with spikes, his leopard skin, all the emblems of his trade, are hung up on the wall behind him. His all-important cup, or calabash, carved from the shell of an Indian nut, hangs there too. It is at once a receptacle for the coins he collects and a drinking cup.

All the day the dervish sits before his tent, and when the owner of the house to which he has attached himself appears he screams his cry of "Hakk, Ya Hakk," which means "On Truth, Oh God!" When he becomes impatient and feels that he has waited long enough, he bows loudly on his horn, by day or by night, until the poor persecuted family is willing to give him anything in order to be rid of him.

That is the surest way for a beggar to earn his due reward.

FINANCE

—By B. C. Forbes—

Fort Worth, Texas.—Find out how things are going in Fort Worth and you find out how things are going in the western half of Texas.

Well, what follows tells the story:

Building permits show an increase of 25 per cent. over last year.

Department stores sales are up 9 per cent.

Deposits in Fort Worth and other banks embraced in the eleventh Federal Reserve district have drawn checks to the tune of 15 per cent. more than last year.

Savings deposits have increased nearly 9 per cent.

The deposits of all member banks have increased more than 13 per cent.

How do the bankers feel?

W. E. Connell of the First National Bank, which has deposits of $20,000,000, and whose officers and directors own, as individuals, between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 acres in Texas, admitted that ranchers have been "throwing cattle away." He had 10,000 head and still has 7,000. Mr. Connell, however, added: "The cattle business has been bad for five years. I have been through it before. But the sun will shine again. I think it will start to shine very soon."

President Pemberton of the Farmers & Mechanics National Bank said that, notwithstanding lack of rain in certain sections, Western Texas is in fine shape. "We have cotton, oil, cattle, increasing manufactures and a great grain growing business," he pointed out, "and are bound to do well."

President Wilkinson of the Continental National Bank said no other industry could have stood what the cattle industry has stood during recent years. "Cattlemen are the bravest set of men in the world," he emphasized.

R. E. Harding of the Fort Worth National Bank, and W. L. Smallwood of the Texas National Bank also expressed confidence in coming improvement.

* * *

W. G. Turner, one of Fort Worth's most prominent citizens, who is interested in various enterprises, said: "There is bound to be more improvement in Texas in the next five years than there has been in the last twenty-five. We have more people, more money and more confidence in Texas people, Texas institutions, Texas banks, Texas manufacturers."

PULVERIZED COAL GREAT SUCCESS, SAYS LEARNARD

President George E. Learnard of International Combustion Company, returning from Europe, says: "We put the first pulverized fuel plant into operation in Birmingham, England, while I was there, at cost of about $1,000,000, and it proved a great success. Several installations of the same type is to be made there shortly at a similar cost.

"Economical use of coal is absorbing attention of the British government, particularly in view of the English coal situation. There are important developments in the economical use of coal being worked out which we will participate in to a large extent in the near future. The idea of burning coal in pulverized form for use of all-steel furnaces is taking a rapid hold on all countries of Europe. Compared with the water cooled furnaces, the steel furnace is far more efficient and less expensive in the long run.

"From my observations on this and a previous trip early in the year I am satisfied our business in Europe will exceed domestic business within a short time."

TRADING ACTIVE IN COTTON MILL STOCKS

Trading in cotton mill stocks during the week has been more active than for any period since 1923, when the cotton mills were enjoying good business. There was a further rise of 58 cents per share in the average of twenty-five leading stocks, according to figures released today by R. S. DiDDCkson & Co.

COMMON USE OF AIR TELEPHONE FORECAST

By FRANK H. MELOON,
President William Dubilier of the Boston-listed radio issue bearing his name and well known as a radio inventor, forecasts common employment of trans-Atlantic telephone communication in future. The British General Post Office is already conducting conversations by this method.

* * *

James J. Phelan, Boston banker, never was an apostle of gloom, which in part accounts for his phenomenal success in life. The statistics he gave out last week, showing the steady progress of New England and proving that general business despondency was groundless, were most convincing. They should be studied, especially by those who are trying to tell us that New England's prosperity has followed the advice of Mr. Greeley and he didn't go West either!

* * *

R. W. McNeel, who conducts a financial service at 60 Wall street, appears to hit the nail squarely on the head when, discussing "charts" and "lines," he says: "There is no mechanical substitute for judgment."

Frank Schirmer of Schirmer, Atherton & Co., says: "An interesting feature to the present speculative situation is the profound study by statisticians, chart 'fiends,' and traders of the factors, portents and signs of an early culmination of the present major bull movement. We don't remember that in previous bull markets there were anything like the current efforts to 'guess' the end of the upward trend; indeed, Wall Street is filled with prophecies of culmination running all the way from this month to next Spring, but the consensus of opinion seems to be that while we may see an intervening reaction, PINIS will not be written to this bull market until about the time the tax reduction measure passes Congress next Winter."

The firm of Arnold & Sears, Incorporated, have today announced the removal of their offices from No. 200 Devonshire street to larger and more completely equipped quarters at No. 50 Federal street.

SENTIMENT IN TRADE GOOD

If any single thing characterizes the current business situation it is that of increasing confidence. The National Bank of Commerce of New York in a summary of current conditions declares that there are better grounds today for continued prosperity ahead than at any time in the past five years.

Much of the better feeling is due to the possibility of a normal Midsummer lull in many important lines of trade is less pronounced than expected earlier in the season. In fact, in some cases the recession in activity a month or two ago has given place to expansion. Many feel that this condition points to a quickening of activity in the Autumn of more than usual proportions.

Of course, here and there are some lines of trade which are in the doldrums, but viewing the country as a whole the conclusion is that most of the industries which are prospering, labor is well employed, orders on the books substantial and in most cases, profits are satisfactory. Yet in spite of the fact that the volume of business is nothing so impressively there is nothing which smacks of boom times. There is no hasty plant expansion, no piling up of inventories and no reckless borrowing.

It is to be said that the maxims of business conduct are changing somewhat and the avoidance of inventory speculation is proving to be regarded as a sound policy rather than indicative of a weak or uncertain position.

The outlook for the crop situation received somewhat of a setback by the loss of 751,000 bales in the cotton outlook during the first half of July. The possibility of a big real bumper proportions is dimmed but nevertheless the crop unless it shows ground materially from now on should be of good size.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
MARSHMALLOW RECIPES

Since last Monday, on the Martha Lee page, I wrote about the many uses there are for marshmallows in modern cooking.

Quite a number of members of the WNAC American Women's Club have asked for marshmallow recipes, so I have grouped these questions together today.

It is not so long ago that we used to think of marshmallows just as a candy, something wholesome enough for the little tots to eat—and especially nice to toast before an open fire.

Some of my pleasantest memories of boarding school days are of toasting marshmallows on a hat pin over a one-burner lamp. (How long ago that must have been.)

Today, however, progressive housewives everywhere use marshmallows in a variety of ways making different food dishes.

For instance, there are marshmallows and marshmallowsw, but the round ones I can't tell you the name unless you drop me a line—think are the best both for eating and cooking. They are flavored just right; not too highly, but just enough and their texture is different from most marsh marshmallows, too.

Here are just a few suggestions as to how to use them.

As a filling between the layers and on top of sponge cake, in tarts, for frosting, in shortcake and fudge, as a chocolate marshmallow frosting on cup cakes and layer cakes, between squares of hot gingerbread, in tapioca pudding, in puddings and in hot chocolate, in tomato bisque, in fruit cocktails, in leeks and in salads, on the Old Dominion graham crackers, in sauces for ice cream and in candies. When you have some freshly baked apples, as soon as you remove them from the oven, put a whole marshmallow on top of each apple and set back in the oven until the marshmallow is slightly brown.

Here are just a few marshmallow recipes. If you care to have me, I will be glad to send you a booklet containing quite a collection of others, all of which have been proved excellent.

Recipe No. 1428
MARSHMALLOW TARTS

Cut plain or puff paste in four-inch squares; bring each corner to the centre and press firmly in place. Chill thoroughly, then bake in a hot oven. In the centre of each tart place one-half a peach; in the cavity of the peach place a marshmallow. Put in a hot oven and leave until the marshmallow softens, which should take more than a few minutes. Arrange on serving dish and serve with peach syrup.

Wanted: Two Good Judges

Massachusetts Looks to Governor Fuller to Find Them

By making haste slowly in appointing the two new judges, whose addition to the Massachusetts Superior Court was authorized by the Legislature at its recent session, Governor Fuller encourages his fellow citizens to hope that his selections will strengthen the judiciary of the Commonwealth, instead of merely increasing its size.

Should His Excellency be able to prevail upon Justice John M. Maloney of the First Northern Middlesex and Justice Arthur P. Stone of the Third Eastern Middlesex to accept elevation to the Superior Court, the announcement would be hailed with general gratification by the thoughtful public. For these two men would bring to the Superior bench the industry and the courage and the vision, as well as the character and ability, that enter into the endowment of a good judge.

There are several other district judges of whom the same might be said with equal truth. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said with equal truth of all the district judges of Massachusetts because not all the Governors of Massachusetts, during the last decade, have discharged the appointing power with diligence or distinction.

Too many Governors, fronted with the grave responsibility of an appointment to the judiciary, have yielded at times to the importunities of self-seeking politicians and lawyers, and the bitter result of such surrenders is the presence on the Massachusetts bench today of men who are unfit to be there because they lack the industry, the courage, the vision, or, in several instances, even the ability to hold a judgeship in this Commonwealth.

A Massachusetts court is no place to which a mediocrity, a drone, or a jellyfish ought ever to be appointed by any Governor for any reason.

If Governor Fuller is not able to find among the district judges two judges as pre-eminently qualified for the Superior bench as are Judge Maloney and Judge Stone, the Boston Evening American hopes that His Excellency will not flinch from going elsewhere in search of his appointees.

Chief Justice Rugg of the Supreme Judicial Court and Chief Justice Hall of the Superior Court are the best advisors that Governor Fuller could have in the selection of the two new judges. The two Chief Justices possess a learning in the law and a knowledge of the personnel of the bench and the bar that Governor Fuller could make good use of in his search for judicial timber.

And Governor Fuller is in close enough touch with public sentiment, as this newspaper believes, to be firm in his resolve to make his appointments to the judiciary an outstanding achievement of his administration.

League as Film Censor

Its Aim an Additional Argument, If Any Was Needed, for Putting It Into the Discard

If any additional argument were needed to put the League of Nations into the discard, here it is: Sir Eric Drummond, Secretary-General of the League, requests that all governments furnish him promptly with information concerning the regulation of moving pictures.

Back of the request is the desire of the League to formulate a code of censorship of motion picture films throughout the world.

At first glance, the request appears impertinent and ridiculous. Deeper consideration reveals its potential danger.

From its professed purpose of preventing war to this attempt to control public entertainment is a descent from the sublime to the ridiculous for the League and its executives.

If the League of Nations is to censor the films of the world, why should it not take over stage censorship, too? Why should it not include within its functions the right to pass on world literature? Why not pass on the right of schools to teach evolution?

The idea might be developed indefinitely by an active and ambitious League executive. Criticism is frequently heard of the trend of feminine fashions.

The abbreviated bathing suits observed at Deauville and Coney Island often stir comment. Modern dancing, especially the aesthetic shimmy and the tremulous Charleston, have been held subversive of youthful morals by certain pedants.

What a fertile field is here for the exercise of autocratic authority by the League of Nations!

Great Britain, whence came Sir Eric and which dominates the League, already exercises a rigid censorship of stage and screen. American producers of drama have felt it. Motion pictures which showed America triumphing over Britain in the Revolutionary War have been censored savagely by the British censor. Plays which have won artistic and financial success in this country have been banned in Britain as morally objectionable.

Let Great Britain establish censorship over anything through the League of Nations and America will surely suffer for Britain's benefit.

The censorship suggestion reveals once more the sordid, selfish purposes which the League seeks to conceal under the cloak of patriotism and international amity. The waste basket is the logical receptable for Sir Eric's request.

An Eccentric Justice

May He Live and Work to 100

Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes will NOT retire from the Supreme Court Bench, at least for the present, and that's excellent news.

Mr. Justice Holmes, born in 1841, is eighty-four years old. He inherited from his father the sort of brain that improves with time. There is no reason why he shouldn't be sitting on that bench ten years hence, upholding his eccentric theory that the Constitution was made for the people and not for corporations.

Reg. U. S. Patent Office

By Elsie Robinson.

SHALL the Browns get a car? That's a question that's agitating Ed and Gladys and the three kids. The kids and Ed are for it unanimously. So's the dog. But Gladys is holding out.

"We've been married fourteen years," says Gladys; "we had a terrible time at first. Between being sick and Ed losing his jobs and the babies coming, one right after another, it seemed as if we'd never get our heads above water. But for the last two years things have been a little bit better.

"We made the last payment on the house last Summer and finished paying for Willie's appendicitis operation. Now we're putting something away regularly. It's the first time we've had a real bank account. Ed joked me the way I count every dollar that goes in, but I don't care. I never felt safe before.

Car Good Investment.

"And now he wants to buy that automobile. I tell him it's the craziest thing I ever heard of doing. We've gotten on all right without an automobile all these years. Why does he want to get one now, just when we've started saving a little? It will take pretty nearly all we can save to make the monthly payments, to say nothing of the upkeep. I don't see any sense in it.

"I know Ed's real put out at me because I don't want him to do it, but I can't help that. He doesn't know how hard it's been on me—all the scrimping and saving. A man gets out of the house—he doesn't realize. Saving always come hardest on the woman. I wish you'd write about that, Elsie. There must be lots more wives that don't approve of spending every cent for an automobile. Won't you show the men what a waste it is?"

No, I won't, Gladys, for I don't believe it's a waste. I think a car is the very best investment a family can make. Even the cheapest car pays far bigger dividends than its price could pay if left in the bank.

What sort of dividends? The most valuable dividends on earth, Gladys. Dividends in health. Dividends in joy and rest, relaxation and inspiration. Dividends in deepened understanding between members of the family and richer companionship. Dividends in lively expectations that brighten the dull days between trips. Dividends in happy, foolish, tender memories that never fade.

Settled Down

Cars aren't merely a mechanical convenience, Gladys. They're a sign of a great change and advance in human relationship—particularly in domestic relationship. The first real human home was probably a cave—a dark, guarded sanctuary against cold and danger.

It was a harsh place in which to live, and the home life that went on in it partook of that harshness. Married life in the cave days didn't mean much fun. It meant a continual struggle for food, a continual hiding from danger, a continual hoarding and apprehension.

In time men left the caves, but that first conception of married life went with them. Play time stopped when married time began. Homemaking was a serious business. You found that out when you were first married, didn't you, Gladys? The old cave monotony and tread still gripped you and Ed.

It wasn't only that you didn't have enough money. It was the way you felt about homes and getting married. Married folks didn't EXPECT to fly around and have good times. They didn't EXPECT to stay young and foolish and envious about life. When you married you SETTLED DOWN.

Auto Big Home Boost.

But suddenly, with the coming of the twentieth century, there has dawned a new conception of married life. We're beginning to think that it isn't necessary to settle down when we're married—that it isn't necessary for married life to be solemn and tiresome and stale—that it isn't healthy for people to grow old before their time. And the flivver is the symbol of that new feeling. It's the force that has broken down the guards of the cave and brought the cave dwellers, blinking, out into the sun. It's the biggest boost the home has received in many a century.

You won't have quite as much money in the bank if you buy that car, Gladys, but you'll have lots more laughter on your face, lots more love in your hearts, lots more wisdom in your skull and considerably more health, physically, mentally, spiritually.

MEDBURY SAYS—

By John P. Medbury

MILLIONS of women all over the country should prepare themselves for a great shock. The chicle manufacturers are threatening to take the mirrors out of their gum machines.

THE girls have been doing too much looking and not enough buying.

THEY should do more chewing and less gazing.

MIRRORS are a necessity. Every beautiful woman knows that she's pretty, but she likes to verify it.

HOMELY girls use them too. Your sweetheart may flatter you, but a looking glass will tell you the truth.

THIS is the only way you have of checking up on your face.

THESE slot machines don't always give out good gum, but their facial reports are authentic.

A SKEPTICAL dame tried thirty-seven machines and she was just as homely in the last one as she was in the first.

SHE got worse looking with every penny.

THIS made her so sore that she hasn't chewed any gum for nine years.

WHY should she be kind to the manufacturers when their mirrors were mean to her?

SHE won't chew any more gum until they install kinder looking glasses.

ONE girl got the shock of her life. When she discovered how homely she was she quit speaking to her folks.

AND another dame was so beautiful that she started Ritzing hers.

OF course some women are so conceited that they won't even believe a mirror.

THEIR face is right and the looking glass is wrong.

ONE lady had to win a beauty contest before she realized how homely she really was.

SHE knew that if her face was her fortune she was on the verge of bankruptcy.

MIRRORS are a woman's best friend. A looking glass will tell you things that even your chum would be afraid to mention.

THE RHYMING OPTIMIST

By Aline Michaelis

IF I could pilot a pirate boat over the opaline sea, far on the waste of the waves to float, wild as the winds, and free, would I might chance, led by Fortune's wile steering that pirate craft, right on the coast of a desert isle, treasure-strewn, fore and aft! If I should find in its endless store all that man's heart desires, gold from the depths of the mountains' core, emeralds' and rubies' fires, what would I choose? Oh, the rarest things, pearls with a perfect screen, amulets priceless, and white jade rings, vases of aqua-marine. Then, when I sailed into port once more, what would my treasures bring? I would go seeking a fairer store, asking a dearer thing! Could I but trade them for love and peace, joy and a heart serene, ah, with what eagerness I'd release diamond and aquamarine!

DO YOUR BEST—YOU MAY HAVE GENIUS

By DR. FRANK CRANE

THE writer once asked an eminent musician why it was that Paderewski was better than other piano players.

This was his reply:

"Did you ever see a horse race? Well, in a close finish, you know, one horse is just a little bit better than the others. That's why Paderewski is the greatest pianist."

This enigmatical reply suggests a great deal.

Intangibles make genius.

It is the thing you cannot put your finger on, the indefinable, the impalpable, which bridges that fine line between talent and genius.

Work alone won't take you over the line. It takes you nearer, and you cannot bridge it until you near it, but work alone will not do it.

Determination alone won't do it. You may grit your teeth and say, "now something's got to crack. I will do it." But determination alone will never create a work of genius.

Education alone won't do it. It helps, but genius is often a thing apart from books and instruction.

The truth is, genius is something you either have or you have not. If you haven't, there is nothing you can do about it.

Then, you ask, what is the use talking of it?

This is the answer:

Nobody ever knows whether he has genius or not. Some unpromising specimens have had it. It sometimes does not show itself for years and years. Sometimes it is not recognized until long after the possessor is dead.

No one can tell until he has tried, and he has not tried until he has done his best and continued to do his best for a long time.

De Maupassant, the master of the French short story, wrote and tore up what he wrote for five long years, perfecting his art. Later he produced such masterpieces as "Happiness" and "The Piece of String."

His advice was: "Practice for years. Make yourself as clear as possible. Then in everything you write do your best. Some day the muse may visit you and you will write a masterpiece. And one sonnet or one short story is enough to bring lasting fame."

As someone has said: "Genius is the matter of a quarter of an hour." If you always try to do your best, always strive to perfect to the highest possible degree, you may be one of the favored few, but anyhow you will have done your part.

Having genius is something you cannot determine and are not responsible for, but doing your best is entirely within your control.

And after all, even higher praise than "He possessed genius," is "He made the most of the stuff he was given to work with."

WITH THE AIRMEN AT THE POLE

By Garrett P. Serviss,

Noted Astronomer and Writer on Scientific Topics of Popular Interest.

"How could Amundsen, on arriving at the North Pole by aeroplane, with no tracks to show the way he had come, locate the direction of Spitzbergen, or Alaska or Greenland or any other place? With no stars visible in the heavens and the sun circling around him without ever setting or rising, with no east, no west, and no more north, but every direction south, what could he do to tell whereaway in the south south being every direction) any particular place lay? How would the compass show at the Pole?—H. E. L., Worcester, Mass.

HIS best helper would be a reliable watch or clock, running on First Meridian or Greenwich time.

The magnetic compass would, of course, be of use, because the north magnetic pole lies about on the 69th meridian west of Greenwich, and nearly 20 degrees south of the Pole.

The pointing of the needle would therefore indicate the direction of the northeastern corner of North America and roughly, of the upper Mississippi Valley.

But owing to the variations and eccentricities to which magnetic indications of direction are subject, the compass would be a far less trustworthy guide for the airman at the North Pole than a watch or chronometer set, as before said, to keep Greenwich time, and with its hour-hand making one revolution in 24 hours around a 24-hour dial.

With the Sun.

If such a watch were laid upon the pole its hour hand would keep step with the sun. The rotation of the earth would turn its dial around from right to left, while its hand would travel at the same rate from left to right.

Suppose now, that, being provided with a watch of that kind, the airman, before starting on his journey, should set its hour hand at 12 at the moment when it was noon at Greenwich and thenceforth keep it running on Greenwich time.

After arriving at the pole he would, as you see, see the sun circling once every twenty-four hours around the whole sky, horizontally, moving from left to right. During precisely the same time the hour hand of his watch would make the circuit of the dial.

Having been set at 12 when the sun was on the Greenwich meridian, it would continue to arrive at 12 whenever the sun came back to Greenwich meridian. It would only be necessary, then, for the airman at the pole to look toward the sun when his watch hand pointed to the figures 12 in order to know in what direction Greenwich lay.

All meridians meet at the pole. So, when the hand pointed to twenty-four hours the direction of the sun would be that of the 180th meridian from Greenwich, or just the other side of the earth. Looking at the sun then, the airman's eyes would range in the direction of the middle of the Pacific Ocean.

The Variations.

At 17 hours by the watch the sun would be seen in the direction of New York; at 11 hours in the direction of Spitzbergen; at 23 hours in the direction of Alaska; at 18 hours in the direction of central Greenland, and so on.

Of course, all of these determinations of direction would be more or less approximative, because the watch would only keep mean time and follow the mean sun, while the real run would now be ahead of the watch and now behind.

But these variations would not be of serious importance for merely general estimates, and they could be corrected by means of the "equation of time."

Any other meridian than that of Greenwich would serve a similar purpose, the one important thing being to have some perfectly fixed point of reference. But practically the whole world uses the meridian of Greenwich for the sake of uniformity.

WHEN YOU FAIL TO REACH YOUR GOAL, LEARN WHY

All your life you have waited for an opportunity to do a certain thing, and just as you are about to take the step which is to bring you to the desired goal you seem to find the way blocked.

Then it is time for you to sit right up and take notice.

There must be something of which you did not reckon in your calculations. Do not fly into tantrums about it, but keep cool and find out where your figuring went wrong.

Don't lay it to any other person or thing. Study it out with the idea that in some way it is your own fault, or your own lack of qualifications.

Don't waste a moment in regrets about a matter which is beyond your control.

But don't set a thing down as beyond your control when it may be your own fault that you did not succeed in the end.
